Environment/Land Law/Natural Resources

Los Angeles

The Los Angeles office of the California Department of Justice, Office of the Attorney General has volunteer internship opportunities for law students during both the school year and the summer. The Attorney General's Office has three sections that handle environmental work and offer an unparalleled variety of environmental experience. The three sections are as follows:

The Environment Section enforces a variety of state and federal environmental laws affecting California's natural resources, its communities, and public health. Environment Section attorneys investigate and litigate cases both on behalf of state agency clients and on behalf of the Attorney General acting in her independent capacity under the Government Code and the California Constitution.

The Land Law Section represents California agencies in matters involving lands that the State owns or regulates for resource conservation, recreation and development. Its attorneys advise and defend state agencies that regulate development, including coastal development and offshore oil drilling; conservation of environmentally sensitive habitats; tideland preservation; oil and gas exploration (incl. fracking); high speed rail; and the administration of state parks.

The Natural Resources Section represents the many California state agencies responsible for protecting the state's natural resources and controlling pollution. The section's attorneys enforce and defend the state's environmental, water quality, water rights, air quality, natural resource, endangered species, water supply, pesticide, forestry, and agricultural laws.

The positions involve rigorous legal research and writing projects, and the opportunity to observe many aspects of client representation and litigation, such as trials, depositions, motion hearings, settlement conferences, client meetings, and other proceedings.
