FILE BRIEF OF AMICI CURIAE
STATES IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS'
MOTION FOR A PRELIMINARY
INJUNCTION, TEMPORARY
RESTRAINING ORDER AND ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

Judge: Honorable James Donato
Hearing Date: January 7, 2021
Action Filed: December 21, 2020

The States of California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, and the District of Columbia (States or Amici States) respectfully request and move for leave to appear as amici curiae and file the proposed amicus curiae brief, attached hereto as Exhibit A, in support of Plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction, and temporary restraining order and order to show cause, set to be heard on January 7, 2021.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs and Defendants consent to the States’ request. A proposed order is attached.

I. STANDARD FOR MOTION FOR LEAVE TO APPEAR AS AMICUS CURIAE

District courts may consider amicus briefs from non-parties with unique information or perspectives that are useful or otherwise desirable to the court. See NGV Gaming, Ltd. v. Upstream Point Molate, LLC, 355 F. Supp. 2d. 1061, 1067 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (quoting Cobell v. Norton, 246 F. Supp. 2d. 59, 62 (D.D.C. 2003) and Ryan v. Commodity Futures Trading Comm’n, 125 F.3d 1062, 1064 (7th Cir. 1997)). “The ‘classic role’ of amicus curiae is to assist a court in a case of public interest by ‘supplementing the efforts of counsel,’” and “generally courts have ‘exercised great liberality’ in permitting amicus briefs.” Cal. v. U.S. Dep’t of the Interior, 381 F. Supp. 3d 1153, 1163–64 (N.D. Cal. 2019) (quoting Miller-Wohl Co. v. Comm’r of Labor & Indust., 694 F.2d 203, 204 (9th Cir. 1982); Woodfin Suite Hotels, LLC v. City of Emeryville, No. C 06-1254 SBA, 2007 WL 81911, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2007)).

While there are no strict prerequisites to qualify for amicus status, “[d]istrict courts frequently welcome amicus briefs from non-parties . . . if the amicus has unique information or perspective that can help the court beyond the help that the lawyers from the parties are able to provide.” Sonoma Falls Developers, L.L.C. v. Nev. Gold & Casinos, Inc., 272 F. Supp. 2d 919, 925 (N.D.Cal. 2003) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). In addition, participation of amicus curiae may be appropriate where the legal issues in a case have potential ramifications beyond the parties directly involved. Id.

<sup>1</sup> The States are separately filing a Motion for Leave to File a Brief as Amici Curiae in the related matter, Immigration Equality, et al., v. U.S. Department of Homeland Security, et al., 4:20-cv-09258-JD. The proposed amicus briefs in both matters make similar arguments, with variations based on the Plaintiffs’ pleadings.

II. INTEREST AND IDENTITY OF AMICI CURIAE

Every year, Amici States welcome thousands of asylum seekers into our borders. In 2017-2019, Amici States constituted six of the top ten states of residence for individuals whose affirmative asylum applications were granted.<sup>2</sup> Combined, these six States were home to 60.7 percent of the total number of individuals granted affirmative asylum applications in the United States.<sup>3</sup> In fiscal year (FY) 2019, immigration courts in the States issued approximately 41,910 asylum decisions.<sup>4</sup>

The rule at issue here, Procedures for Asylum and Withholding of Removal; Credible Fear and Reasonable Fear Review, 85 Fed. Reg. 80,274 (the Rule), introduces a litany of provisions that will dramatically transform the asylum system into an unrecognizable process in which few asylum seekers will attain protection. These changes will harm thousands of current and future States' residents, resulting in many bona fide asylum seekers being denied protection and ordered removed; or alternatively, many asylum seekers being deterred from filing an application at all. As government entities, the States have a unique interest in ensuring that the United States continues to be a safe-haven for refugees, a congressionally-established principle which this Rule undermines. The States also have an interest in keeping families together—which as explained in the attached brief, is made more difficult under the Rule.

Additionally, the States' law enforcement interests are impacted by this Rule. As more asylum seekers are forced into the shadows because they are deterred from applying for or are denied relief, the States' ability to enforce criminal, labor, and civil rights laws is hindered. Furthermore, the States have a strong interest in supporting immigrants, including asylum seekers, residing in their geographical boundaries. In furtherance of the States' interest, they have carefully crafted systems that function to welcome and deliver essential services to immigrants.

As set forth in greater detail in the attached brief, the States have made significant financial investments in these programs and services, and have created state departments responsible for administering them. These systems, in turn, have resulted in thriving immigrant communities that strengthen the social fabric and economies of communities throughout the States. By making asylum much more difficult to attain, and in fact, attaching great risks to filing asylum applications through the expansion of grounds upon which an application may be found frivolous, the Rule stands to upend this progress and undermine the States' programs and investments.

Finally, the States have an interest in the success of their economies, tax bases, and communities—all of which benefit from the contributions of asylum seekers targeted by this Rule. Indeed, immigrants' contributions have never been more evident than during the COVID-19 pandemic, as immigrants comprise a significant portion of the nation's essential workforce. By preventing asylum seekers from obtaining lawful status, and potentially resulting in increased deportations, the Rule negatively impacts the States' communities, economies, and tax revenue. For these reasons, Amici States are particularly well-suited to provide this Court with a unique perspective on the Rule's impact on the public interest.

III. PROPOSED AMICUS CURIAE BRIEF'S RELEVANCE AND AID TO THE COURT

The proposed amicus curiae brief focuses on the public interests at stake, and in particular, provides this Court with a perspective on how this broad, omnibus Rule could harm the States and their residents if not enjoined. The proposed brief begins with a discussion of the Rule's gravest potential effects—namely, that many of the States' most vulnerable residents could be denied protection and families could be separated. These two outcomes are contrary to the States' interests, which embrace the American principles of providing refugees a home and family unity. The brief also explains how the States' enforcement of criminal laws, and labor and civil rights protections will be imperiled by the Rule because more asylum seekers will be forced to live in the shadows without immigration status, making them less likely to file complaints or otherwise raise abuses with authorities. Further, the Rule's provisions related to withdrawal of purportedly frivolous applications will make it more difficult for State agencies to prevent unscrupulous immigration preparers. The proposed brief also explains how State-funded programs may be impacted by the Rule. Particularly, and in light of the complexities the Rule introduces into the asylum application process, State-funded legal service providers will need to devote additional time and resources for each case, and divert resources to re-strategizing their approaches to representing clients, revising their training, and re-allocating staff time. The States' healthcare programs may also be strained as more asylum seekers go without legal status and fear obtaining healthcare. Finally, the brief discusses how the States' economies and communities benefit greatly from asylum seekers. In sum, the brief will provide the Court with a perspective on Amici States' interests and the ways in which the Rule harms those interests, that only the States themselves can provide.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Amici States respectfully requests this Court's leave to appear as amici curiae and deem the proposed amicus brief filed. Motion.

INTRODUCTION AND STATEMENT OF INTEREST

The States of California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, and the District of Columbia (States or Amici States) submit this brief in support of Plaintiffs’ motion for preliminary injunction, and temporary restraining order and order to show cause, to enjoin the final rule published by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and U.S. Department of Justice (US DOJ) (together, the Defendants): Procedures for Asylum and Withholding of Removal; Credible Fear and Reasonable Fear Review, 85 Fed. Reg. 80,274 (the Rule).

The Rule introduces a litany of provisions that will dramatically transform the asylum system into an unrecognizable process in which only a narrow few can attain protection. These changes will have an incalculable impact on thousands of current and future State residents.<sup>1</sup> Amici States are home to at least 60.7 percent of the total number of individuals granted affirmative asylum in the United States in fiscal year (FY) 2019.<sup>2</sup> In FY 2019, immigration courts in the States issued approximately 41,910 asylum decisions.<sup>3</sup>

In harming current and future residents, the Rule harms the States. Specifically, the Rule: (1) undermines the States’ interests by denying protection to those in need and increasing family separations; (2) pushes putative asylees into the shadows, impairing the States’ ability to enforce criminal, labor, and civil rights laws; (3) burdens State-funded programs, including legal services and healthcare; and (4) deprives the States of asylum seekers’ contributions, which are integral to

ARGUMENT

I. THE RULE UNDERMINES THE STATES’ INTERESTS BY DEPRIVING ASYLUM SEEKERS OF PROTECTION AND INCREASING FAMILY SEPARATIONS.

A. The Rule Undermines the States’ Interest in Providing Refuge to Asylum Seekers.

The purpose of the Refugee Act of 1980, which established the present asylum system, was to codify “one of the oldest themes in America’s history—welcoming homeless refugees to our shores.” S. Rep. No. 96-256, at 1 (1979), as reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 141, 141. The Amici States have a profound interest in upholding this fundamental American tenet—especially where, as here, the Federal Government fails to do so.

The Rule’s changes to the asylum system are numerous and varied, but each change shares a common thread—making humanitarian protection more difficult to obtain. Among several restrictive and punitive provisions, the Rule codifies that the Attorney General “will not” grant asylum if nine negative discretionary factors are present, unless the applicant can meet the high bar of establishing “extraordinary circumstances”<sup>5</sup> or prove by “clear and convincing evidence[] that the denial of asylum would result in [an] exceptional and extremely unusual hardship.” 85 Fed. Reg. 80,396-97. Even if the applicant makes this showing, the application can still be denied on discretion “depending on the gravity” underlying the application of the negative discretionary factor. Id. at 80,397. The Rule further provides “significant[]” adverse discretionary factors that adjudicators “shall” consider. Id. at 80,396. The Rule allows immigration judges to pretermitt asylum claims before the applicant has had an opportunity for a full hearing. Id. at 80,280. And it expands the circumstances under which an application can be deemed frivolous, thereby barring <sup>4</sup> The States note that twenty-three States’ Attorneys General, including many of the signatories to this brief, submitted a comment letter expressing concerns about the Rule’s potential impacts on the States’ interest in family unity, law enforcement, State-funded programs, and the States’ economies and workforce during COVID-19. Comment on FR Doc # 2020-12575, <https://tinyurl.com/AGscomment>. The Rule makes no mention of the States’ unique concerns.

<sup>5</sup> The Rule does not define extraordinary circumstances but describes the term as encompassing “those involving national security or foreign policy considerations,” indicating an extremely high standard that will not apply in the vast majority of cases. 85 Fed. Reg. 80,397.

the applicant from immigration benefits in the future, id. at 80, 279. 8 U.S.C. § 1158(d)(6) (frivolous asylum application consequences). The burden of these new barriers will fall hardest on the States' most vulnerable residents, depriving many otherwise eligible applicants from protection.

While recognizing that several components of the Rule are bound to have the same result, the States highlight how the Rule's discretionary factors will effectively block bona fide asylum seekers from relief in three ways by: (1) applying to asylum seekers who did not seek protection in a third country, even if it would be dangerous or futile to do so; (2) rendering the filing of an application after one-year of unlawful presence to be a negative factor, potentially denying relief to those who failed to file due to trauma; and (3) applying to unaccompanied children.

1. The Rule Effectively Requires Applicants to File for Protection in Third Countries, Disregarding Their Safety.

The Rule considers an applicant's failure to apply for humanitarian protection in at least one country through which they transited to be a significant adverse discretionary factor—ignoring that for many applicants, such an application would be infeasible and unsafe. 85 Fed. Reg. 80,282. In addition, the Rule treats as negative factors that will result in denial: (1) an applicant's failure to apply for humanitarian protection in a country where they were present for 14-days, and (2) an applicant's failure to apply for humanitarian protection in at least one country transited through if they transited through two or more countries. Id.

The Rule exempts individuals from these adverse discretionary factors if they passed through countries that are not party to refugee-related agreements and protocols. Id. at fn. 7. The exemption, however, is based on a false premise that countries that are signatories to refugee-related agreements and protocols provide asylum seekers with the actual ability to safely seek protection. In fact, the vast majority of countries, including those with severely repressive governments, are signatories to these agreements and protocols.<sup>6</sup> For instance, while China is a

<sup>6</sup> A total of 151 countries are parties to the 1967 Protocol and 1951 Convention. United Nations High Commissioner of Refugees, States Parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol (April 2015), <https://tinyurl.com/unhcrsign>.

1 signatory to a refugee-related agreement, it is also oppressive to religious minorities and conducts
 2 “mass arbitrary detention” of Uighur Muslims and members of other Muslim groups.<sup>7</sup> Yet, under
 3 the Rule, asylum seekers who have a layover in China en route to the United States would be 4 expected to apply for protection there, even if they would be at risk of persecution.

5 Most commonly, the Rule will compel the thousands of Central American asylum seekers
 6 who apply for protection in the United States each year to first seek protection in Mexico in order
 7 to avoid a discretionary denial.<sup>8</sup> But, seeking asylum in Mexico is not feasible or safe for many 8 people. This reality, borne out in the Federal Government’s own administrative record, led a 9 federal court to preliminarily enjoin Defendants’ third country transit asylum bar. E. Bay
 10 Sanctuary Covenant v. Barr, 385 F. Supp. 3d 922, 953 (N.D. Cal.), aff’d, 964 F.3d 832 (9th Cir.
 11 2020) (“[T]he administrative record fails to support the conclusion that asylum in Mexico is a 12 ‘feasible alternative.’”).

13 At the outset, there are several barriers to protection in Mexico, such as an untenable 30-
 14 day filing deadline.<sup>9</sup> Beyond that, asylum seekers would be at an increased risk of crime, 15 exploitation, and persecution as they await the adjudication of their cases in Mexico. As an 16 example of these dangers, as of January 2020, there were 816 reports of murder, rape, torture, 17 kidnapping, and other violent assaults against asylum seekers who were forced to remain in 18 Mexico during the pendency of their asylum cases because of Defendants’ restrictive program,
 19 the “Migrant Protection Protocols.”<sup>10</sup> Asylum seekers placed in migrant detention centers receive 20 little reprieve, as officers with the National Migration Institute frequently extort detainees.<sup>11</sup> The 21 situation would be especially dire for migrant women, who are often subject to harassment and abuse in Mexican immigration detention centers.<sup>12</sup> Similarly, Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Queer (LGBTQ) asylum seekers in detention suffer “discrimination, sexual harassment and even aggression from the other detainees or the [center] staff.”<sup>13</sup>

In practice, the Rule’s discretionary factors will force many asylum seekers to make the excruciating choice to either apply for relief in a third country—where they may face danger or even persecution—or forgo that process and risk their claim being denied in the United States.

2. By Making One Year of Unlawful Presence a Negative Factor, the Rule Will Seriously Harm Trauma Victims.

Under the Rule, applicants who apply for asylum after one year of unlawful presence in the United States will ordinarily be denied on discretionary grounds. As Plaintiffs adeptly argue, this provision is at tension with the statutory one-year filing deadline for asylum applications. The statutory deadline exempts applicants from filing their application within one year if they establish either exceptional circumstances related to their ability to timely file, such as physical or mental illness, or that there are changed conditions effecting their eligibility for relief. 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(2)(D). But these exemptions do not expressly apply to the Rule’s unlawful presence discretionary factor, and, as Defendants recognize, there will be some applicants who overcome the one-year filing deadline just to have their applications denied on discretion for failing to file within one year.<sup>14</sup>

This unfair outcome may befall victims suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), as it is well-recognized that PTSD can hinder an applicant’s ability to file a timely asylum application. See Mukamusoni v. Ashcroft, 390 F.3d 110, 117 (1st Cir. 2004). PTSD is highly prevalent among victims of domestic violence, childhood abuse, and hate crimes.<sup>15</sup> This discretionary factor will be yet another obstacle to these applicants' ability to receive relief.

<sup>14</sup> It does not appear that an applicant’s showing of an exceptional circumstance impairing their ability to file an asylum application under 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(2)(D) would be an “extraordinary circumstance” to rebut this discretionary factor. Defendants recognize that there will be some applicants who meet the statutory filing deadline, but to whom the discretionary factor will apply. 85 Fed. Reg. 80,355. In response to this concern, Defendants only state that adjudicators can “consider those circumstances in accordance with the [R]ule.” Id.

3. Most Discretionary Factors Apply to Unaccompanied Children.

Although Defendants exempted children from the Rule's unlawful entry discretionary factor, all other discretionary factors will apply to unaccompanied children, thereby making them more likely to be denied asylum. Congress expressly recognized the vulnerabilities of unaccompanied children and their unique need for protection in the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008. Pub. L. No. 110-457, 122 Stat. 5044 (TVPRA). Under the TVPRA, children are exempted from certain statutory bars to asylum, such as the safe third country agreement bar and the one-year filing deadline. 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(2)(E); 8 C.F.R. § 208.4(a)(5)(i). Children are also entitled to first present their asylum claims during non-adversarial interviews at the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) Asylum Office with officers trained in "child-sensitive and trauma informed interview techniques," instead of adversarial immigration court proceedings. J.O.P. v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 409 F. Supp. 3d 367, 372 (D. Md. 2019).

Yet, the Rule subjects unaccompanied children to discretionary denials of asylum for minor, but common, issues—including filing an application one year after entry, or after passing through a third country without applying for relief, rendering the statutory protections previously enacted by Congress irrelevant. With asylum off the table, these unaccompanied children will be forced to present claims for withholding of removal and protection under Convention Against Torture (CAT), which can only be granted by an immigration court. 8 C.F.R. § 208.16. As Congress recognized in enacting the TVPRA, immigration court is not the proper venue for children to present their claims, partly because those proceedings subject unaccompanied children to cross-examination about the worst moments of their lives. See J.O.P., 409 F. Supp. 3d at 372 (citing 8 U.S.C. §§ 1158, 1232(d)).

In all, these discretionary factors, like several other provisions of the Rule, will prevent asylum seekers—particularly those vulnerable to abuse—from obtaining asylum. Defendants justify these obstacles to relief by reasoning that asylum is a discretionary benefit. 85 Fed. Reg. 80,282. But discretion should not be used as a cudgel to block all but the lucky few from asylum, as it would be under the Rule. Such a result is contrary to the founding principles of the United States asylum system, the States’ interests, and the public interest. Leiva-Perez v. Holder, 640 F.3d 962, 971 (9th Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (“deliver[ing] [asylum seekers] into the hands of their persecutors” is against the public interest).

B. The Rule Undermines the States’ Interest in Family Unity.

The Rule will result in the denial of protection, and subsequent deportation, for many of those who will be or are currently seeking asylum in the States. These deportations will have the consequence not just of putting an applicant at risk for persecution, but also separating them from their family members who reside in the United States.<sup>16</sup> Moreover, with asylum out of reach due to the Rule’s discretionary factors and expanded bars to relief, withholding of removal and protection under CAT will be the only forms of relief available for many applicants. Unlike asylum, neither withholding of removal nor CAT offers any protection to an applicant’s children or spouse. See 8 U.S.C. § 1158(b)(3)(A). The Rule could thus result in absurd situations where a parent is granted protection, but their child who does not have a separate claim is ordered removed. “The result is an almost impossible choice: live in safety while separated from one’s family and their perilous life a world away, or join them in their peril and risk the probability of death or imprisonment.” See Haniffa v. Gonzales, 165 F. App’x 28, 29 (2d Cir. 2006).

The separation of asylum seekers from their family members will harm the States, which benefit from family units that provide stability and support for their members, as well as irreplaceable care and nurturing of children. See, e.g., Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 431 U.S.

<sup>16</sup> See Office of Refugee Resettlement, U.S. Dep’t of Health and Human Services (HHS), Unaccompanied Alien Children Released to Sponsors by State (Sept. 27, 2019), <https://tinyurl.com/ORRuac> (in FY 2019, over 8,000 unaccompanied children were released to sponsors residing in California); HHS, Frequently Asked Questions Regarding Unaccompanied Alien Children, <https://tinyurl.com/HHSuac> (last visited Dec. 21, 2020) (explaining that sponsors generally must be parents or close relatives).

1 494, 503-04 (1977) (“It is through the family that we inculcate and pass down many of our most
 2 cherished values, moral and cultural.”). The Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee
 3 Policy, a congressionally appointed commission tasked with studying immigration policy,
 4 expounded upon the necessity of family reunification in 1981:

5 “Reunification . . . serves the national interest not only through the humaneness of the 6 policy itself, but also through the promotion of the public order and wellbeing of the 7 nation. Psychologically and socially, the reunion of family members . . . promotes the health and welfare of the United States.”<sup>17</sup>

8 Indeed, family unity is the basis of the modern immigration system. Solis-Espinoza v. Gonzales, 9 401 F.3d 1090, 1094 (9th Cir. 2005) (“The Immigration and Nationality Act (‘INA’) was 10 intended to keep families together.”).

11 Because family units are a bulwark of support for all their members, separating families
 12 will further traumatize and endanger asylum seekers. Family separation can result in: irregular 13 sleep patterns, which can lower academic achievement among children; toxic stress, which can 14 delay brain development and cause cognitive impairment; symptoms of PTSD; and a greater risk
 15 of developing mental health disorders such as depression and anxiety.<sup>18</sup> Trauma can also have 16 negative physical effects on children, such as loss of appetite, stomachaches, and headaches,
 17 which can become chronic if left untreated.<sup>19</sup>

18 The Rule’s likely effect of increasing asylum denials will devastate asylum seekers and 19 their families, with impacts that will extend to their communities and to the States.

20 II. THE RULE HINDERS THE STATES’ ABILITY TO ENFORCE THEIR OWN LAWS.

21 The numerous barriers to asylum implemented by the Rule are likely to result in a chilling
 22 effect on asylum applications—especially because the Rule greatly intensifies the risk of filing an 23 application by expanding the ways in which an application can be deemed frivolous, a label that

1 results in a permanent ban on most immigration relief. As a result, fewer people will file for 2 asylum and more will remain undocumented. The States will be harmed because undocumented
 3 immigrants are less likely to report crime or cooperate in state investigations of crime; and more
 4 likely to enter into the underground economy, and therefore less likely to report ongoing labor
 5 and civil rights violations. Consequently, the Rule interferes with the States' ability to enforce 6 their penal, labor, and civil rights laws. The States have a fundamental interest in being able to 7 enforce their own laws. Alaska v. U.S. Dep't of Transp., 868 F.2d 441, 443 (D.C. Cir. 1989).

10 A. Asylum Seekers Who Remain Undocumented as a Result of the Rule
 11 Will Be Deterred from Cooperating with Law Enforcement.

12 Undocumented individuals are less inclined to cooperate with law enforcement or provide 13 helpful information when they are a victim of a crime, for fear of engaging with state actors and 14 becoming subject to deportation.<sup>20</sup> The disincentive to assist law enforcement will make it more
 15 difficult for States to enforce their penal laws, and puts immigrants at risk of being victims of 16 crime themselves.

17 The States' law enforcement interest in eradicating "notario fraud" under consumer
 18 protection and criminal laws is particularly undermined by the Rule. Notario fraud refers to 19 immigration scams promulgated by individuals who represent themselves as immigration
 20 attorneys, but are not licensed as an attorney or as an authorized non-attorney for immigration
 21 purposes. For example, because asylum seekers at risk of having their application deemed 22 frivolous may opt to withdraw their application with prejudice and be deported, 85 Fed. Reg.
 23 80,280, 80,398-99, fewer asylum seekers will have an opportunity to file an ineffective assistance 24 of counsel claim or otherwise alert authorities of a fraudulent scheme being conducted by the 25 unscrupulous preparer, and the States may never find out. Therefore, the Rule obstructs the 26 States' interest in and ability to discipline fraudulent preparers.

B. The Rule Will Deter Asylum Seekers from Reporting Significant Labor and Civil Rights Abuses.

States' labor and civil rights laws, which protect their residents from wage theft, exploitation, and discrimination at work, are also threatened by the Rule. See generally, Cal. Gov. Code §§ 12900-12996 (Fair Employment and Housing Act); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 (Unfair Competition Law), et seq.; Cal. Lab. Code §§ 200-889, 1171-1206 (wage and working conditions provisions) 1200; D.C. Code § 32-1301, et seq. (Wage Payment and Collection Law); D.C. Code § 32-1331.01, et seq. (Workplace Fraud Act); D.C. Code § 32-1001, et seq. (Minimum Wage Revision Act); D.C. Code § 32-531.01, et seq. (Sick and Safe Leave Act); D.C. Code § 2-220.01, et seq. (Living Wage Act); N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 34:11-56a to -56a38 (minimum wage provisions); N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 10:5-1, et seq. (Law Against Discrimination); N.Y. Labor Law Articles 5 (hours of labor), 6 (payment of wages), 19 (minimum wage standards), and 19-A (minimum wage standards for farm workers); N.Y. Workers' Comp. Law § 17. These laws are enforced without respect to immigration status, but effective enforcement relies on employees' ability and willingness to report violations. Despite the significant labor and civil rights abuses that befall unauthorized workers, fear of reprisal and deportation often inhibits unauthorized workers from reporting such violations.<sup>21</sup> Asylum seekers in particular fail to report labor violations—including working weeks without pay and enduring physical abuse at work—because they fear immigration consequences.<sup>22</sup> A study in Chicago found that, of the immigrant workers who have suffered a workplace injury and report it to their employer, 23 percent reported being either immediately fired or threatened with deportation.<sup>23</sup>

1 In placing barriers within the asylum process, the Rule will have a chilling effect on asylum
 2 applications, which will in turn, have a chilling effect on applicants reporting abuses or engaging
 3 with law enforcement. The Rule thus directly harms the States' ability to enforce its laws.

4 III. THE RULE BURDENS THE STATES' PROGRAMS, MANY OF WHICH ARE DESIGNED
 5 TO SUPPORT IMMIGRANTS.

6 The Rule will burden the very programs in which the States have invested, because these 7 programs will need to shift resources to respond the Rule's effects on asylum seekers.

8 First, many States have invested in legal organizations which provide services to 9 immigrant populations. For example, in FY 2019-2020, the California Department of Social 10 Services allocated almost $45 million to administer the Immigration Services Funding program,
 11 which provides funding to organizations that represent asylum seekers, including Plaintiffs
 12 Pangea Legal Services and Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc.<sup>24</sup> In FY 2020, the District
 13 of Columbia (District) authorized $2.5 million for Immigrant Justice Legal Services, a grant
 14 program to organizations that offer legal services to asylum seekers.<sup>25</sup> Such legal services are 15 critical in light of data comparing the success of asylum seekers with and without counsel: asylum
 16 seekers who are not detained and have legal representation in immigration court proceedings
 17 prevail in 74 percent of their cases; those without representation prevail only 13 percent of the 18 time.<sup>26</sup> For asylum seekers who are detained, 18 percent prevail when represented, while only 19 three percent prevail when not represented.<sup>27</sup> The Rule's new pretermission and frivolous
 20 provisions make obtaining counsel even more imperative for asylum applicants who need 21 representation to navigate the complex asylum system and avoid the serious consequences of 22 having their case pretermitted or deemed frivolous. Further, the Rule's expanded bars and 23 discretionary factors will reduce the number of immigrants who are eligible for asylum, forcing 24 them to pursue more difficult forms of relief, and which may require legal expertise to claim. The

1 urgent need for legal services arising from the Rule's creation of a near unrecognizable asylum
 2 process will place increased need for counsel on legal organizations already managing existing 3 caseloads.

4 Beyond the increased need for representation, the Rule will require legal organizations to 5 change their approach to asylum cases because of the new discretionary factors, altered eligibility
 6 standards, and expanded bars to relief. These changes will frustrate the missions of such 7 organizations in the States and require the allocation of additional time and resources for each
 8 case. Organizations will need to divert considerable resources to re-strategizing their approaches
 9 to representing clients, revising their training, and re-allocating staff time. As a result, the number 10 of cases these organizations can take will decrease at a time when there will be increased need for 11 counsel for State residents. Because their funding is based, in part, on the number of cases
 12 handled per year, and the number of clients they anticipate serving, the Rule will imperil the 13 organizations' sustainability. Compl. ¶ 351. Harms to these organizations redound to their 14 funders, including the States, whose priorities and funding decisions will also bear the impact of 15 the Rule.

16 Second, the Rule will place a heavy burden on the States' medical and mental health
 17 programs. For example, the DC Healthcare Alliance Program is a District-funded program
 18 designed to provide medical assistance to District residents who are not eligible for Medicaid,
 19 such as asylum seekers.<sup>28</sup> Additionally, California, New York, the District of Columbia, Illinois,
 20 Oregon, Massachusetts, and Washington all provide full scope health benefits to low-income
 21 children regardless of immigration status.<sup>29</sup> The added trauma that asylum seekers will suffer, due
 22 to the uncertainty surrounding their legal status given the Rule's obstacles to obtaining asylum,
 23 will likely cause long-term negative health impacts. Long-term stress can contribute to serious

1 will need to allocate or re-allocate resources to identify, assess, and treat asylum seekers.<sup>31</sup>

2 Moreover, because of the Rule's likely effect of depriving otherwise eligible asylum
3 seekers of legal status, fewer people will have work-permits and thus, employer-sponsored health
4 insurance. Many of these applicants cannot qualify for federal government-sponsored insurance
5 due to their immigration status and may be required to rely on State-funded health services. 8
6 U.S.C. § 1611. Furthermore, the uninsured have restricted access to preventative services, which 7 results in greater healthcare costs in the long term.<sup>32</sup> These costs will put additional pressure on 8 strained public hospitals, which often pay for the care of uninsured patients.<sup>33</sup> Lower insured rates
9 also harm public health at large, because the uninsured are less likely to receive vaccinations,
10 which prevent the spread of infectious diseases throughout the community—a concern especially 11 relevant as the States contend with COVID-19.<sup>34</sup>

12 Additionally, undocumented asylum seekers will be more fearful to obtain routine
13 healthcare because they are afraid of potential immigration consequences for seeking care.<sup>35</sup> This 14 harms the States' initiatives expanding healthcare to as many people as possible, particularly 15 during COVID-19, because the States recognize healthcare for all residents is better for the 16 overall health of our communities. However, when individuals are afraid to get routine 17 healthcare, state healthcare systems are tasked with addressing acute medical conditions, and 18 scarce emergency room resources are burdened with the aftermath of preventable conditions.<sup>36</sup>

IV. ASYLEES AND ASYLUM SEEKERS ARE VITAL TO THE SUCCESS OF THE STATES' ECONOMIES AND THE PROSPERITY AND HEALTH OF THE STATES' COMMUNITIES.

Immigrants, including asylum seekers, are the backbone of States' workforce and economy. By depriving putative asylees of protection, the Rule will also deprive Amici States of their entrepreneurship and significant contributions to the States' communities.

The following are just three examples of immigrant contributions to the States' economies:

- California: In California, there are 6.6 million immigrants in the State's workforce.<sup>37</sup> In 2018, immigrant business owners accounted for over 38 percent of all Californian entrepreneurs and generated almost $24.5 billion in business income, and immigrant-led households in California paid over $38.9 billion in state and local taxes and exercised almost $290.9 billion in spending power.<sup>38</sup>
- Illinois: Immigrants also play a big role in the economy of Illinois. In 2016, Immigrants in Chicago alone contributed $1.6 billion to the state's economy through taxes and helped create or preserve 25,664 local manufacturing jobs.<sup>39</sup> Also, immigrant-owned businesses generated $63.9 billion in sales in Illinois in 2018.<sup>40</sup>
- New York: In New York, 2.8 million immigrant workers comprised 28 percent of the labor force in 2018. Immigrant-led households in New York paid $35.4 billion in federal taxes and $21.8 billion in state and local taxes in 2018.<sup>41</sup>

Asylum seekers also contribute to the States through increased tax revenue and increased purchasing power. A draft 2017 report by HHS found that over the past decade, refugees, including asylees, contributed $63 billion more in tax revenue than they cost in public benefits.<sup>42</sup>

<sup>42</sup> Rejected Report Shows Revenue Brought in by Refugees, N.Y. TIMES (Sept. 19, 2017), <https://tinyurl.com/2017DraftReport>.

Further, undocumented immigrants residing in the States pay approximately $7.6 billion in state and local taxes annually.<sup>43</sup> Although unauthorized workers pay taxes, tax revenue increases when immigrants can legally work, and the States could stand to lose substantial revenue as a result of the Rule. For example, in Massachusetts, undocumented immigrants pay an average of $184.6 million in state and local taxes each year, an amount that would increase to $240.8 million if they had legal status and work authorization.<sup>44</sup> Similarly, undocumented immigrants in New Mexico would have paid in excess of $8 million more in taxes in 2017 if they had full legal status.<sup>45</sup>

The vital role that immigrants, including asylum seekers, play in the States' economies and communities is particularly pronounced in the context of COVID-19. Immigrants comprise 18 percent of the labor force deemed "essential," including 16 percent of health care workers, 31 percent of agricultural and farm workers, 26 percent of wholesale grocery workers, 18 percent of essential retail workers (restaurants, grocery stores, gas stations, pharmacies, etc.), 24 percent of construction workers, and 19 percent of workers providing service to maintain safety, sanitation, and operations of essential businesses.<sup>46</sup> Notably, of the approximate 3 million immigrant-owned businesses that were active in February 2020 across the country, about 80 percent were in "essential" industries, the majority of which have been able to continue operation.<sup>47</sup> Even during a global health pandemic, immigrants continue to provide essential services, such as health care, as well as create employment opportunities to the States and their residents.

By adding hurdles to obtaining asylum, the Rule impedes asylum seekers from obtaining legal status, thereby significantly lowering the tax revenue, economic contributions, and essential services that the States receive from asylum seekers participating in the economy.
