This letter is to notify you that some of your confidential information may have been released by the Employment Development Department (EDD) in a notice mailed to an employer for whom you did not work. Our analysis of records shows that between September 14, 2013, and October 9, 2013, your full name and social security number (SSN) may have been mailed to an incorrect employer.

Employers regularly receive these claim filing notices as part of the verification required in processing unemployment benefits and are aware that the information contained in them is confidential. In fact, some of these notices already have been returned to the EDD by employers noting the information on the notice does not match their records.

Enclosed is a Fact Sheet from the California Office of the Attorney General that explains the steps you may elect to take to protect your personal information. You will also find helpful information on their website at www.oag.ca.gov/privacy.

The EDD assures you that the cause was identified and corrected to prevent any further occurrences.

If you have any questions, you may submit your question online using Ask EDD and selecting the Privacy topic or you may contact (916) 654-7401.

Sincerely,
