CafeMom Members,

We were recently alerted to a possible security breach involving account information that had occurred several years ago. We immediately investigated the situation and are reaching out to share what we've learned and how we are protecting your data.

Our investigation showed that email addresses and passwords for CafeMom accounts created before July 2011 were compromised at some point in the past. At this time, we have found no evidence of unauthorized access or wrongdoing and the systems that powered cafemom.com in 2011 are no longer the systems that run the site today.

Since 2011, we have made significant upgrades and improvements to our systems, network, security protocols, password security, and databases. In addition to increased security, monitoring, and alerting for all of our systems, we are also using strong, one-way encryption to store passwords and are confident that another breach of this nature would not be possible today.

We strongly recommend that you change your CafeMom password if it has not been updated since 2011. Additionally, if that password was used in any other services, we strongly recommend that you also update your password in those services as well.

We would like to apologize to all of our users who were affected by this breach. We will update our community if any further relevant information comes to light.

Sincerely,

The CafeMom Team
