ROB BONTA

ATTORNEY GENERAL

April 27, 2022

Dear Fellow Attorneys General:

Over the last decade, throughout this country, we have seen a tidal wave of restrictive abortion laws enacted to systematically limit reproductive freedom. In 2021 alone, state legislatures passed a record number of laws to obstruct reproductive choice, including limiting insurance coverage for abortion care, prohibiting abortion-inducing medication, and banning abortions far before viability. Many of these laws also criminalize the provision of abortion, forcing providers and patients to risk their careers and often their lives when making medically important, private decisions.

The right to make private decisions about one's body and determine whether and when to have children, is fundamental to a person's autonomy and critical to ensuring that all persons capable of becoming pregnant, including LGBTQ individuals, have an equal role in our society and economy. Instead of protecting the fundamental right to make reproductive choices, state legislatures have also orchestrated measures that assert interests in fetuses and embryos, effectively stripping people who become pregnant of their equal protection rights. This deprivation of people's liberty is not new.

For years, state actors across the country have subjected individuals experiencing pregnancy to improper and discriminatory criminal prosecution, detention, and surveillance. Criminal statutes meant to protect people who are pregnant from the violent acts of others have been misapplied to penalize them for any number of activities, where even legal acts or omissions are viewed as criminal if they result in harm to the fetus or a pregnancy loss. The National Advocates for Pregnant Women have found that since the 1973 landmark decision of Roe v. Wade, over 1,600 women have faced arrests, detentions, or equivalent deprivations of physical liberty in which being pregnant was a necessary element of the crime or a "but for" reason for the punitive action taken against them and their families.

Criminalizing pregnancy loss is incredibly dangerous given that the risks of miscarriage and stillbirth are tragically high. And misguided application of penal codes by prosecutors, child welfare authorities, and courts inevitably exacerbates racial inequities, as it targets women who may have limited access to healthcare and are unaware of their pregnancy, are susceptible to unique health complications, suffer from substance use disorder, or experience domestic violence. This misapplication of criminal laws most harms people of color, people with lower incomes, and people living in rural communities. Reproductive justice demands that states not only protect access to abortion but also ensure that criminal laws are not weaponized to punish pregnant individuals for their personal choices or life circumstances.

In recent years, the misapplication of Section 187 of the California Penal Code led to the prosecutions of Adora Perez and Chelsea Becker—two women who were charged with "fetal murder" for allegedly causing the stillbirth of their fetuses after the consumption of controlled substances.

My office has issued a statewide alert to ensure that people who are pregnant and experience pregnancy loss are not further burdened by improper and unjust criminal charges.

The attached legal alert has been issued to all California district attorneys, police chiefs, and sheriffs making clear that Section 187 of the California Penal Code was intended to hold accountable those who inflict harm on individuals who are pregnant, resulting in fetal death, not to punish people who suffer the loss of their pregnancy.

In California, my office will work to ensure that we do not criminalize the loss of a pregnancy.

Now, I am asking other state Attorneys General to review their laws and issue similar alerts where necessary. As a result of the attack on reproductive rights in this country, more and more people experiencing pregnancy will be forced to seek refuge for reproductive care in our states. Given that inevitability, it is more important than ever that states not only step up to protect a person's constitutional right to safe and legal abortion, but also to ensure that our own criminal statutes are not utilized as punitive tools against those experiencing pregnancy loss.

While states across the country continue to enact laws that deliberately violate reproductive rights and undermine access to safe and legal healthcare, California will uphold the dignity, equality, and liberty of people experiencing pregnancy by protecting their reproductive freedom and shielding them from unjust criminal prosecution. Join us.

Sincerely,

ROB BONTA

Penal Code 187 and "the unlawful killing of . . . a fetus"

Notice of statutory construction: Penal Code 187 and "the unlawful killing of . . . a fetus"

The Attorney General has construed Penal Code section 187 as it relates to the actions or inactions of a person carrying a fetus that are alleged to have caused the death of that fetus. The Attorney General's construction is contained in court documents filed in multiple cases, including the attached amicus brief filed in In re Perez, Case No. 21W-0033A, Kings Co. Sup. Court (June 25, 2021).

Penal Code section 187 does not impose criminal liability on a person carrying a fetus for allegedly causing the miscarriage or stillbirth of that fetus.

Summary of analysis: This reading of section 187 is compelled by the law's text and purpose.

Text: Penal Code section 187, subdivision (a) defines murder as "the unlawful killing of a human being, or a fetus, with malice aforethought." The statute excludes lawful abortions or acts by a physician to save the life of "the mother of the fetus." (Pen. Code, § 187, subd. (b)(1) and (b)(2).) It also expressly excludes any act that "was solicited, aided, abetted, or consented to by the mother of the fetus." (Pen. Code, § 187, subd. (b)(3).) Because persons necessarily consent to their own voluntary actions, the exclusion in subdivision (b) means that persons cannot be criminally liable for their own actions or inactions that are alleged to have caused the death of their fetus.

Purpose: The Legislature broadened the scope of section 187 to include the unlawful killing of a fetus in specific response to the California Supreme Court's decision in Keeler v. Superior Court (1970) 2 Cal.3d 619. In that case, the defendant was charged with murder after he attacked his pregnant exwife, intentionally causing the death of her fetus. The Keeler Court held that the unlawful "killing of a 'human being'" did not encompass the killing of a fetus. In amending section 187, the Legislature intended to criminalize only third-party violence against pregnant persons resulting in fetal death. There is no evidence of legislative intent to extend criminal liability to pregnant persons.

Please refer to the attached amicus brief for the Attorney General's full legal analysis.

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

This petition for writ of habeas corpus challenges, among other things, the interpretation and application of California Penal Code section 187. The Attorney General is the "chief law officer of the State" (Cal. Const., art. 5, § 13) who "has charge . . . of all legal matters in which the State is interested" (Gov. Code, § 12511), including ensuring that the California Penal Code is properly interpreted and applied. In the Attorney General's view, the district attorney's interpretation of section 187 was plainly incorrect. This amicus curiae brief explains the reasons for the Attorney General's view, and is intended to assist the Court in deciding this matter. (See Cal. Rules of Court, rule 8.200(c)(2).)

INTRODUCTION

Half a century ago, the Legislature amended the State's murder statute, Penal Code section 187, to include the "unlawful killing" of a "fetus." The text, purpose, and legislative history of that amendment demonstrate that the Legislature intended only to ensure that a third party who unlawfully kills a fetus does not escape punishment. The amendment was the Legislature's targeted response to a 1970 California Supreme Court decision that refused to extend the statute beyond its text, which then addressed only the killing of a "human being." In amending section 187, the Legislature was careful to exclude several categories of actions, including those related to legal abortions (Pen. Code, § 187, subds. (b)(1)-(2)) and, in addition, any "act" that was "aided, abetted, or consented to by the mother of the fetus" (Pen. Code, § 187, subd. (b)(3)). A woman necessarily consents to an act that she herself voluntarily undertakes, free of fraud, duress, or mistake. The acts in question in this case—Perez's alleged drug use during her pregnancy—fall squarely within the subdivision (b)(3) exclusion. This Court should issue an order to show cause.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On December 30, 2017, Perez, 37 weeks pregnant, went to Adventist Health Hanford and suffered a stillbirth. (Petn. for Writ of Habeas Corpus, p. 10.)¹ The Hanford Police Department was dispatched to Adventist Health Hanford. (Ibid.) Perez's doctor informed the police that he attributed the stillbirth to methamphetamine use during pregnancy. (Ibid.)

The district attorney subsequently charged Perez with murder under Penal Code section 187, alleging that the stillbirth was caused by Perez's alleged drug use. (Id. at p. 10, citing Ex. C, Complaint and First Amended Complaint, p. 130.) Perez's court-appointed counsel did not challenge whether section 187 applied. Perez pleaded "no contest" to an amended complaint alleging a violation of Penal Code section 192, subdivision (a), voluntary manslaughter.² (Id. at p. 13, citing Ex. A, Reporter's Transcript of Proceedings, at pp. 59-60.) Perez accepted the plea because her counsel and the court advised her that she was facing a life sentence on the murder charge. (Id., citing Ex. A at pp. 51-52.) Perez confirmed on the record that "the reason for [the plea]" and her acceptance of a manslaughter conviction was "to avoid the possibility of getting the life sentence on the murder case." Perez's counsel also confirmed that Perez entered the voluntary manslaughter plea to avoid the murder conviction. (Id. at p. 13, citing Ex. A at p. 61.) The trial court recognized that Perez could not "factually . . . be" guilty of voluntary manslaughter and confirmed that Perez "enter[ed] into that plea to avoid [a] conviction" for murder under section 187. (Ex. A at p. 68.)³

In that same plea hearing, the prosecutor explained what facts would have been proven "had this matter proceeded to trial." (Ex. A at p. 68.) According to the prosecutor, the facts would have shown that Perez was "pregnant with an unborn child." (Ibid.) "When the child was eventually delivered, the child was stillborn." (Ibid.) The "primary contributing factors" to the fetus's death was "asphyxiation from a placental detachment and a toxic level of methamphetamine within the fetus." (Ibid.) The court found a "factual basis" for the murder charge and concluded that the plea "falls within the meaning of People v. West." (Id. at pp. 68-69.)

^{. .} her factual allegations were proved." Thus, citations are to Perez's Petition for a Writ of Habeas Corpus, where applicable.

² Perez's counsel explained that she agreed to this plea under People v. West (1970) 3 Cal.3d 595.

After the plea, Perez retained private counsel to move to withdraw the plea on the basis of ineffective assistance of trial counsel. (People v. Perez, No. 18-CM- 0021 (Kings Co. Sup. Ct.), Notice of Motion; Motion to Withdraw Plea of Guilty, May 29, 2018.) Perez's new attorney argued that prior counsel had failed to investigate whether some factor other than the drug use had caused fetal death. (Ibid.) The court denied the motion. (Petn. for Writ of Habeas Corpus, p. 14, citing Ex. A at pp. 92-93.) In June 2018, the court sentenced Perez to the maximum term of 11 years. (Id., citing Ex. A at pp. 109-110.)

Pursuant to People v. Wende (1979) 25 Cal.3d 436, 438, on direct appeal, Perez's counsel filed a brief stating that there were no arguable issues to assert. After its independent review, the Court of Appeal reached the same conclusion and affirmed the judgment on March 26, 2019. (People v. Perez, March 26, 2019, F077851 [nonpub. opn.].)

In October 2020, Perez filed an application to recall the remittitur in the Court of Appeal on the ground that appellate counsel had rendered ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to challenge the scope of Penal Code section 187. (People v. Perez, Oct. 21, 2020, F077851 [nonpub.opn.].) The Attorney General filed a non-opposition to the application. (Ibid.) On March 29, 2021, the Court of Appeal denied the application to recall the remittitur, stating that the claims would be "more appropriately raised by way of a petition for writ of habeas corpus in the superior court." (Ibid.) The court reasoned that Perez would "have the option to present additional evidence relevant to [her] claims and develop a more complete record" in habeas proceedings. (Ibid.) Perez petitioned for review of the denial in the California Supreme Court. (People v. Perez, No. S268092.) In response to an order from the Court requesting a response to the petition, on June 11, 2021, the Attorney General filed an Answer in support of the petition. (Ibid.) That petition remains pending.

LEGAL BACKGROUND

Perez was charged with murder under Penal Code section 187. It provides that "[m]urder is the unlawful killing of a human being, or a fetus, with malice aforethought." (Pen. Code, § 187, subd. (a)). Section 187 contains important limitations. Specifically, section 187:

undisputed that Perez was charged with murder (Pen. Code, § 187) for allegedly killing her own fetus through drug use, and she pleaded guilty to manslaughter (Pen. Code, § 192) for the same. Perez contends—and the Attorney General agrees, as outlined below—that a woman's actions or inactions that lead to the demise of a fetus while still in the womb do not constitute a crime. It is already well settled that manslaughter lies only for the killing of a "human being," and not a fetus. And as outlined below, it seems equally clear that a woman cannot commit the crime of murder of her own fetus, as actions to which a pregnant woman consents are expressly outside the statute's scope.

The Attorney General agrees with Perez that the text, purpose, and legislative history of California Penal Code section 187 demonstrate that a woman cannot be prosecuted for murder as a result of her own omissions or actions that might result in pregnancy loss.

Statutory construction is an exercise in discerning legislative intent, and courts start with the language of the statue as the "most reliable indicator." (Tuolumne Jobs & Small Business Alliance v. Superior Court (2014) 59 Cal.4th 1029, 1037.) Here, several aspects of the text show that a woman cannot be held liable in the circumstances of this case.

To start, the statute states that section 187 "shall not apply to any person" who engages in the behavior described within the three exceptions set out subdivision (b). (Italics added.) The term "any" is extremely broad. (See Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal.3d 785, 798 ["the word 'any' means without limit and no matter what kind"].) It should be read to include not only third parties whose actions result in the death of a fetus, but also the woman carrying the fetus.

Further, subdivision (b)(3) of section 187 is an independent, stand-alone exception that, by its terms, reaches beyond the medical abortion exceptions described in subdivisions (b)(1) and (b)(2). Again, subdivision (b)(3) exempts from prosecution the "killing of . . . a fetus" when "[t]he act was . . . aided, abetted, or consented to by the mother of the fetus. . . ." The word "consent" in common use means "to permit, approve, or agree; comply or yield." In this sense, crime.

⁵ See https://www.dictionary.com/browse/consent [as of June 9, 2021]; https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/consent ["to give assent or approval"] (as of June

one necessarily consents to one's own voluntary actions that are not undertaken through fraud, duress, or mistake. Because a person "consents" to her own voluntary actions and behaviors, when the mother of a fetus "consent[s]" to the "act" (i.e. the act that allegedly leads to the demise of the fetus), her conduct is necessarily exempted under subdivision (b)(3).

The Legislature's purpose in adding the killing of a fetus to Penal Code section 187 was not to punish women who do not—or cannot, because of addiction or resources—follow best practices for prenatal health. Nor did it intend to punish women who might in desperation seek to end their pregnancies outside normal medical channels.⁶ Rather, this addition was a focused response to Keeler v. Superior Court (1970) 2 Cal.3d 619, holding that the unlawful "killing of a human being" did not encompass a fetus. (See Assem. Com. on Crim. Procedure's Dig., Assem. Bill No. 816 (1970 Reg. Sess.) (July 15, 1970); Review of Selected 1970 California Legislation, Crimes (1971) 2 Pacific L. J. 275, 362-363 [amendment to section 187 "was enacted in response to a June 1970 decision of the California Supreme Court (Keeler v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.3d 619)"].) Keeler was charged with the murder of a fetus after he attacked his pregnant ex-wife, intentionally causing a stillbirth. The court ordered that Keeler's prosecution for murder was barred under Section 187 as it was then written. (Id. at pp. 628, 631.)

In amending Section 187, the Legislature intended to target only the intentional conduct of third parties that causes the death of a fetus. There is no evidence of legislative intent to extend criminal liability to pregnant women. To the contrary—the legislature explicitly excluded abortion from the definition of murder, and broadly excluded conduct "solicited, aided, abetted, ^{9, 2021);} see also Pen. Code, § 261.6 [defining consent as the "positive cooperation in act or attitude pursuant to an exercise of free will. The person must act freely and voluntarily and have knowledge of the nature of the act or transaction involved"]; Schwing, 2 Cal. Affirmative Def. (2d ed. 2017) § 32:1 ["Consent means a capable, deliberate and voluntary assent . . . in some act or purpose, reflecting mental and physical power and free action"].)

or consented to by the mother of the fetus." (Pen. Code, § 187, subd. (b)(3)). This reading is also consistent with the legislative history. As noted, among other things, the amendment was a direct response to the California Supreme Court's decision in Keeler. (See People v. Davis (1994) 7 Cal.4th 797, 802-803.)⁷ The specific impetus for the amendment further evidences the Legislature's intent to criminalize only third-party violence against women resulting in fetal death. There is simply no indication that the Legislature, in amending section 187, desired to do more than close the disturbing loophole noted in Keeler.⁸

A contrary interpretation would lead to absurd—and constitutionally questionable—results. (See John v. Superior Court (2016) 63 Cal.4th 91, 96 [court construes the statute's words in context "to avoid absurd results"]; People v. Engram (2010) 50 Cal.4th 1131, 1161 ["a statute must be construed, if reasonably possible, in a manner that avoids a serious constitutional question"].) It would subject all women who suffer a pregnancy loss to the threat of criminal investigation and possible prosecution for murder. Whether a stillbirth or a miscarriage was due to drug use or some other reason, there is nothing in the statute that would constrain a district attorney's ability to investigate the most intimate aspects of the circumstances of a woman's pregnancy and to bring murder charges against that woman who suffered a pregnancy loss. (See Kilmon v. State (2006) 394 Md. 168, 177-178 [if "the statute is read to apply to the effect of a pregnant woman's conduct on the child she is carrying, it could well be construed to include not just the ingestion of unlawful controlled substances but a whole host of intentional and conceivably reckless activity..., [including but not limited] to smoking, to not maintaining a proper and sufficient diet, to avoiding proper and available prenatal medical care, to failing to

⁷ At the time of the 1970 amendment, Penal Code section 275 provided that a woman who solicited a drug and took it with the intent to procure a miscarriage, except as provided in the Therapeutic Abortion Act, was guilty of a felony. As noted above, section 275 was repealed in 2000. (Stats. 2000, ch. 692 (S.B. 370), § 2.)

While not directly relevant to the interpretation of Penal Code section 187, the Attorney General notes that the Legislature has repeatedly declined to extend punishment to encompass a pregnant woman who experiences a pregnancy loss. (See Sen. Bill No. 1465 (1989-1990 Reg. Sess.) [proposed bill that would have expanded manslaughter to include substance abuse during pregnancy]; Assem. Bill No. 650 (1990-1991 Reg. Sess.) [proposed bill that would have made substance abuse during pregnancy a misdemeanor]; see also Health & Saf. Code, § 123462 [the "state shall not deny or interfere with a woman's fundamental right to choose to bear a child or to choose to obtain an abortion"].)

1 wear a seat belt while driving, . . . to exercising too much or too little, indeed to engaging in 2 virtually any injury-prone activity. . . . "].) 3 The courts should not assume that the Legislature intended such a sweeping and invasive change to the criminal law affecting women's lives without clear evidence of that intent. And 4 5 such evidence is absent here. As discussed, it is settled that the killing of a fetus cannot constitute manslaughter. And, as 6 7 noted, there are compelling arguments that a woman's actions or inactions that result in the 8 miscarriage or stillbirth of her own fetus cannot constitute murder. It therefore appears that Perez 9 was charged with, and convicted of, conduct that is not-and was not-a crime. Such circumstances warrant the issuing of an order to show cause. (See In re Harris (1989) 49 Cal.3d 10 11 131, 134, fn. 2, quoting In re Huffman (1986) 42 Cal.3d 552, 555 ["Habeas corpus will lie when 12 the trial court 'exceeded its jurisdiction by sentencing a defendant 'to a term in excess of the 13 maximum provided by law' [citation], or to correct a misinterpretation of [a] statute resulting in confinement 'in excess of the time allowed by law' [citation]. . . . "].) 14 15 CONCLUSION 16 The Court should issue an order to show cause. (Cal.
