EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

“THE CALIFORNIA REPARATIONS REPORT”
PART I: RECOUNTING THE HISTORICAL ATROCITIES

I. Introduction and Background

The African American story in the United States is marked by repeated failed promises to right the wrongs of the past—both distant and recent—and failure to acknowledge and take responsibility for the structural racism that perpetuated these harms. This report, crafted by the Task Force to Study and Develop Reparation Proposals for African Americans pursuant to its mandate under Assembly Bill 3121 (2020), seeks to change this story with incontrovertible evidence of the harms requiring reparations and meaningful recommendations designed to redress them. The historical information and recommendations in this report are supported by extensive research and analysis, expert witness testimony, and testimony from those who have lived through the horrors and pursued the solutions that are addressed in this report. Taken together with the substantive analysis regarding international standards; local, state, federal, and international examples of reparations; methods for educating the public regarding the critical issues addressed herein; and a catalogue of the racist laws and policies that cumulatively created this nation, this report is intended to satisfy the requirements of AB 3121 in an accessible and comprehensive manner that will facilitate progress towards—finally—enacting meaningful reparations for African Americans in California and the United States.

In 1863, President Abraham Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation, and in 1865 the states ratified the 13th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which commanded that “[n]either slavery nor involuntary servitude . . . shall exist within the United States.” In supporting the passage of the 13th Amendment, its co-author Senator Lyman Trumbull of Illinois said that “it is perhaps difficult to draw the precise line, to say where freedom ceases and slavery begins . . . .” The United States then experienced a 12-year period after the Civil War called Reconstruction, during which the federal government tried—with some success—to give newly freed African Americans access to basic civil rights. As just one example of the many ways in which this period reflected an expansion of rights, by 1868, more than 700,000 African American men were registered to vote in the former Confederate states. These advancements came to an abrupt end after the presidential election of 1876, when federal political leaders reached a compromise which resulted in the withdrawal of federal troops from key locations in the South, effectively ending Reconstruction. Later, in 1883, the United States Supreme Court interpreted the 13th Amendment as empowering Congress “to pass all laws necessary and proper for abolishing all badges and incidents of slavery in the United States.” However, other than during Reconstruction, instead of abiding by the Supreme Court’s and the Constitution’s mandates to abolish “badges and incidents of slavery,” the United States federal, state, and local governments, including California, perpetuated and created new iterations of these “badges and incidents.” The resulting harms have been innumerable and have snowballed over generations.
In 2020, through the enactment of Assembly Bill No. 3121 (AB 3121, 2019-2020 Reg. Sess.), California began the process of addressing its role in accommodating and facilitating slavery, perpetuating the vestiges of enslavement, propagating state-sanctioned discrimination, and tolerating persistent, systemic structures of discrimination on living African Americans across its systems of government at the local and state level. AB 3121 acknowledged that, as a result of this historic and continued discrimination, African Americans in California, especially those whose lineage can be traced to an enslaved person, continue to suffer economic, educational, and health hardships that have prevented them as a people from achieving equality. AB 3121 established the Task Force to Study and Develop Reparation Proposals for African Americans, with a Special Consideration for African Americans Who are Descendants of Persons Enslaved in the United States (Task Force), and directed the Task Force to study and develop reparation proposals for African Americans, taking into account:

a. the institution of slavery, including the federal and state governments that constitutionally and statutorily supported the institution of slavery;

b. the legal and factual discrimination against freed slaves and their descendants from the end of the Civil War to the present, including economic, political, educational, and social discrimination;

c. the lingering negative effects of the institution of slavery on living African Americans and on society in California and the United States;

d. how instructional resources and technologies deny the inhumanity of slavery and the crime against humanity committed against people of African descent in California and the United States;

e. the role of Northern complicity in the Southern-based institution of slavery; and

f. the direct benefits to societal institutions, public and private, including higher education, corporate, religious, and associational.

AB 3121 also required the Task Force to recommend appropriate ways to educate the California public of the Task Force’s findings; recommend appropriate remedies in consideration of the Task Force’s findings; and submit to the Legislature a report of its work. This is the Task Force’s final report, incorporating and updating the contents of an interim report issued in June 2022.

Part I of this report summarizes the harms caused by slavery and the lingering negative effects of the institution of slavery on descendants of persons enslaved in the United States and, more broadly, on living African Americans and on society in California and the United States. So thoroughly have the effects of slavery infected every aspect of American society over the last 400 years, that it is nearly impossible to identify every “badge and incident of slavery,” include every piece of evidence, and describe every harm done to African Americans, and particularly to freed slaves and their descendants. In order to address this practical reality, Chapters 1-13 describe a sample of government actions and the compounding harms that have resulted, organized into specific areas of systemic discrimination.

In order to maintain slavery, government actors adopted white supremacist beliefs and passed laws to create a racial hierarchy and control enslaved and free African Americans. After the end of slavery, although the federal Constitution recognized African Americans as citizens on paper, the government failed to give them the full rights of citizenship and failed to protect African Americans from widespread terror and violence. Along with a dereliction of its duty to protect its African American citizens, direct federal, state and local government actions continued to enforce the racist lies created to justify slavery. These laws and government-supported cultural beliefs have since formed the foundation of innumerable modern laws, policies, and practices across the nation.

Today, 160 years after the abolition of slavery, its badges and incidents remain embedded in the political, legal, health, financial, educational, cultural, environmental, social, and economic systems of the United States of America. Racist, casteist, untrue, and harmful stereotypes created to support slavery continue to physically and mentally harm African Americans today. Without a remedy specifically targeted to dismantle our country’s racist foundations and heal the injuries inflicted by colonial and American governments, the “badges and incidents of slavery” will continue to harm African Americans in almost all aspects of American life.
Part II of this report discusses international standards for remedying the wrongs and injuries discussed in Part I. This well-established framework has guided the Task Force in the formulation of its recommendations so that they comport with the five elements of reparations as set by international standards: restitution, compensation, rehabilitation, satisfaction, and non-repetition. Part II also provides examples of prior international and domestic efforts to provide reparations for human rights violations, such as apartheid, incarceration, and forced sterilization. In keeping with the legal framework for reparations, Part III discusses the required components of a formal apology and recommends how the State of California should offer a formal apology on behalf of the People of California for the perpetration of gross human rights violations and crimes against humanity against African enslaved people and their descendants.

In Parts IV and V, the Task Force recommends appropriate remedies in consideration of the Task Force’s findings, including (a) how any form of compensation to African Americans, with a special consideration for African Americans who are descendants of persons enslaved in the United States, should be calculated; (b) what form of compensation should be awarded, through what instrumentalities, and who should be eligible for such compensation; and (c) whether any other forms of rehabilitation or restitution to African descendants are warranted and what form and scope those measures should take. The latter includes recommendations that the Legislature enact a range of policies needed to guarantee restitution, compensation, rehabilitation, satisfaction, and non-repetition.

Part VI of the report contains a summary of the Task Force’s findings and recommendations regarding implementation of the California Racial Justice Act (Assem. Bill No. 2542 (2019-2020 Reg. Sess.), and Part VII summarizes findings from community engagement and community input regarding reparations and the work of the Task Force. Part VIII recommends appropriate ways to educate the California public about the Task Force’s findings and of the legacy of enslavement and legal discrimination in California. Finally, Part IX contains a compendium of California laws and policies that have had a significant impact in the development of the state and nation’s unjust legal systems, including those that have subjugated and continue to disproportionately and negatively affect African Americans as a group and perpetuate the lingering material and psychosocial effects of slavery.

Taken together, the components of this report are not only intended to satisfy the requirements the Legislature set out in AB 3121, but also to serve as a blueprint for other states and, eventually, the federal government when they perform the critical task of atoning for this nation’s victimization of African Americans, especially those who are descendants of persons enslaved in the United States. While California’s first-in-the-nation effort is an important step, and the Task Force eagerly anticipates the Legislature’s enactment of the recommendations contained herein, this national shame can ultimately be comprehensively redressed only through national reparations.

AB 3121 authorized the Task Force to hold public hearings to pursue its mission. In order to inform the contents of its report, the Task Force held 16 public meetings, during which it considered public comments, expert, and personal witness testimony, in addition to considering the voluminous materials submitted to the Task Force via email from those unable to attend the meetings. In total, the Task Force heard over 48 hours of testimony from 133 witnesses, as well as over 28 hours of public comment in the course of its meetings, and received approximately 4,000 emails and 150 phone calls.

When discussing issues as complex as race and reparations, precision is paramount. Precision helps ensure that the writers and the reader begin in the same place, to arrive at the same understanding. As described later in this report, words have been weaponized throughout American history to dehumanize African Americans. Words can also be used to mend—to acknowledge, to respect, and to uplift. To that end, this report defines and adopts the following terms throughout its pages.

The N-word—the word “nigger” has been used for centuries to dehumanize African Americans. The terms “Negro” and “Colored person” (as opposed to “person of color”), although adopted by African American communities for periods of time, have since been recognized as derogatory terms. When quoting historical documents, this report will quote these words—not to condone the words or their vicious meanings—but to present them in the context in which these slurs were used. The California Legislature enacted AB 3121, recognizing that the lasting wounds of enslavement and discrimination cannot begin to mend until those wounds are first addressed. In that same spirit, this report quotes these terms recognizing that reparations or any other answer to racism cannot be complete until this report squarely faces the horrors of enslavement and the systemic discrimination that followed and persists today.

White supremacy—white supremacy is a system of belief and power that white people are superior to other races. This report confronts the idea of white supremacy and the various forms it takes. When discussing the concept of white supremacy, the report uses the term to refer to two concepts.

First, this report uses the terms “white supremacy” or “white supremacists” to identify groups or individuals who believe that white people are superior to people of other races. When used this way, “white supremacy” describes individual prejudice. Examples of white supremacist groups—including groups that exist to this day—include, for example, the Ku Klux Klan.

Second, this report uses the term “white supremacy” in the American context to describe the racist premise upon which social and legal rules and practices are formed with the intention of discriminating or enacting violence against African Americans, among other marginalized groups. This report also uses it to describe cultural images and stereotypes that reinforce prejudices against African Americans and others. When used this way, white supremacy describes forms of racism that extend beyond individuals or organizations, a form of racism often described as structural or systemic racism. As this report demonstrates, the fundamental political, social, and economic system of our country negatively impacts African Americans regardless of the intent of any one person to be racist.

This report does not use the term “white supremacy” to describe white people as a group, white Americans, or white Californians. Not all white people are white supremacists. Anyone, regardless of race, with or without intent, consciously or unconsciously, can engage in acts of white supremacy, or be a part of a racist system. A racist system harms all who live in it, even those who may have historically reaped the benefits of the system.

Throughout the report, we use words that center the people discussed.

Rather than refer to “slaves,” this report refers to “enslaved persons.” Most historians now refer to “enslaved persons” instead of “slaves” because the term “slave” reduces the enslaved person to an object. Instead, historians use “enslaved person” to grant agency and recognition to the enslaved individual and to remind us about the violence and inhumanity of slavery.

For similar reasons, this report refers to “enslavers,” rather than “owners” or “masters.” The words master or owner suggests a false sense of natural authority and suggest that the enslaved person is less capable than the enslaver. It also hides the fact that these individuals actively chose to enslave other human beings who are—as they were then—entitled to the same human rights as themselves.

Instead of “fugitive,” this report refers to “freedom-seekers” when describing enslaved persons or other people seeking to escape enslavement and other forms of captivity. The term “fugitive” was commonly used with laws such as the Fugitive Slave Laws of 1793 and 1850 passed by Congress, which used the term to reinforce the system of enslavement and criminalize those who sought freedom from it.

Rather than refer to “felon” or “ex-offender,” this report uses terms such as “formerly incarcerated” and “returning citizen.” Similarly, this report uses terms such as “person in prison” or “incarcerated person,” rather than “inmates.” Like the term “fugitive,” the terms “felon,” “ex-offender,” and “inmate” have stigmatized people who are or have once been in jail or prison. By labeling people as nothing more than their criminal justice status, these words deny people their full personhood and reinforce a stigma that prevents people from fully participating in society.

Instead of referring to people without homes as “the homeless,” this report uses terms such as “unhoused people” or “people experiencing homelessness.” This follows the practice of the Associated Press Style Guide, which recognized that the phrase “the homeless” dehumanizes people by collectively reducing them to a label based on housing status, rather than their status as people.

African American—The Task Force voted to generally use “African American,” rather than “Black” or “Black American” when discussing racial classifications. This term includes the descendants of enslaved people who were abducted from their African homelands by force to be enslaved in North America. This report uses “African American” instead of “Black” to refer to such persons, unless “Black” is in a quotation or the source cited or data being relied upon in the text exclusively uses “Black.”

Descendant—The Task Force voted that eligibility for monetary reparations should be limited to those who are able to establish that they are a lineal descendant.
of an African American Chattel enslaved person or of a free African American person living in the United States prior to the end of the 19th Century. When this report refers to “descendants,” it refers to that group of eligible people as defined by the Task Force in that vote.

Though the report uses person-centered terms, the report may sometimes quote historical documents or statements that do not. This report presents these quotations unaltered to present them unfiltered and to provide historical context.

In using person-centered words, this report recognizes that words alone may not cure the wounds that people have suffered. While words may not fix the systems they describe, this report uses these words, recognizing that they are the beginning—not the end—of what must be done to redress racism, past and present.

II. Enslavement

Nationally

America’s wealth was built by the forced labor of trafficked African peoples and their descendants who were bought and sold as commodities. American government at all levels allowed or participated in exploiting, abusing, terrorizing, and murdering people of African descent so that mostly white Americans could profit from their enslavement.

After the War of Independence, the United States built one of the largest and most profitable enslaved labor economies in the world.

The federal government politically and financially supported enslavement. The United States adopted a national Constitution that protected slavery and gave pro-slavery white Americans outsized political power in the federal government. Half of the nation’s pre-Civil War presidents enslaved African Americans while in office, and, throughout American history, more than 1,800 Congressmen from 40 states once enslaved African Americans. By 1861, almost two percent of the entire budget of the United States went to pay for expenses related to enslavement, including enforcing fugitive slave laws.

Enslavers made more than $159 million between 1820 and 1860 by trafficking African Americans within the U.S. Charles Ball, an enslaved man who was bought by slave traffickers in Maryland and forced to march to South Carolina, later remembered: “I seriously meditated on self-destruction, and had I been at liberty to get a rope, I believe I should have hanged myself at Lancaster. . . . I had now no hope of ever again seeing my wife and children, or of revisiting the scenes of my youth.”

Historians have argued that many of today’s financial accounting and management practices developed among enslavers in the U.S. South and the Caribbean. In order to continually increase production and profits, enslavers regularly staged public beatings and other violent acts and maintained deplorable living conditions.

Historians have also found evidence that enslavers raped and impregnated enslaved women and girls and profited from this sexual violence by owning and selling their own children. President Thomas Jefferson, who enslaved four of his own children, wrote that the “labor of a breeding [enslaved] woman” who births a child every two years is as profitable as the best enslaved worker on the farm.

In the census of 1860, the last census taken before the Civil War, of the about 12 million people living in the 15 slave-holding states, almost four million were enslaved. In order to terrorize and force this enormous population to work without pay, the colonial and American governments created a different type of slavery.

Unlike slavery in some other locations, slavery in America was based on the idea that race was the sole basis for life-long enslavement, that children were enslaved from birth, and that people of African descent were naturally destined to be enslaved. Colonists in North America claimed and passed laws to maintain a false racial hierarchy where white people were naturally superior. Colonial laws effectively made it legal for enslavers to kill the people they enslaved. In some states, free and enslaved African Americans could not vote or hold political office. Enslaved people could not resist a white person, leave a plantation without permission, or gather in large groups away from plantations.

After the War of Independence, the American government continued to pass laws to maintain this false racial hierarchy which treated all African Americans as less than human. After the Civil War, the federal government failed to meaningfully protect the rights and lives of African Americans. When Andrew Johnson became president after the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, he proclaimed in 1866, “this is a country for white men, and by God, as long as I am President, it shall be a government for white men.”

The Slave Codes were reborn as the Black Codes and Jim Crow laws segregating African Americans and white Americans in every aspect of life. Although many of these laws were most prominent in the U.S. South, they reflected a national desire to reinforce a racial hierarchy based in white supremacy.

California

Although California technically entered the Union in 1850 as a free state, its early state government supported slavery. Proslavery white southerners held a great deal of power in the state legislature, the state court system, and among California’s representatives in the U.S. Congress.

Some scholars estimate that up to 1,500 enslaved African Americans lived in California in 1852. Enslaved people trafficked to California often worked under dangerous conditions, lived in unclean environments, and faced brutal violence.

In 1852, California passed and enforced a fugitive slave law that made California a more proslavery state than most other free states. California also outlawed non-white people from testifying in any court case involving white people.

California did not ratify the Fourteenth Amendment, which protected the equal rights of all citizens, until 1959 and did not ratify the Fifteenth Amendment, which prohibited states from denying a person’s right to vote on the basis of race, until 1962.

III. Racial Terror

Nationally

After slavery, white Americans, sometimes aided by the government, maintained the badges of slavery by carrying out violence and intimidation against African Americans for decades. Racial terror pervaded every aspect of post-slavery life and prevented African Americans from building the same wealth and political influence as white Americans.

African Americans faced threats of violence when they tried to vote, when they tried to buy homes in white neighborhoods, when they tried to swim in public pools, and when they tried to assert equal rights through the courts or in legislation. White mobs bombed, murdered, and destroyed entire towns. Federal, state, and local governments ignored the violence, failed to prosecute offenders, or participated in the violence themselves.

Racial terror takes direct forms, such as physical assault, threats of injury, and destruction of property. It also inflicts psychological trauma on those who witness the harm and injury. Many African Americans were traumatized from surviving mass violence and by the constant terror of living in the U.S. South. Lynchings in the American South were not isolated hate crimes committed by rogue vigilantes, but part of a systematic campaign of terror to enforce the racial hierarchy.
Executive Summary

Racial terror targeted at successful African Americans has contributed to the present wealth gap between African Americans and white Americans. While lynching and mob murders are no longer socially acceptable, scholars have argued that its modern equivalents continue to haunt African Americans today in the form of extrajudicial killings by the police and vigilantes. Racial terror remains a tool for other forms of discrimination and control of African Americans, from redlining and segregated schools to disparate healthcare and denial of bank loans.

California

Supported by their state and local governments, Californians also terrorized and murdered African Americans in California. The Ku Klux Klan (KKK) established chapters all over the state in the 1920s. During that time, California sometimes held more KKK events per year than even Mississippi or Louisiana. Many of California’s KKK members were prominent individuals who held positions in civic leadership and police departments.

For example, in Los Angeles in the 1920s, numerous prominent residents and city government officials were KKK members or had KKK ties, including the mayor, district attorneys, and police officers. Violence against African American homeowners in California peaked in the 1940s, as more African Americans bought—or attempted to buy—homes in white neighborhoods across California.

Today, police violence against and extrajudicial killings of African Americans occur in California in the same manner as they do in the rest of the country.

IV. Political Disenfranchisement

Nationally

African Americans have pursued equal political participation since before the Civil War, but the federal, state, and local governments of the United States have suppressed and continue to suppress African American votes and political power. After the Civil War, the United States protected the voting rights of African Americans on paper, but not in reality. During the 12-year period after the Civil War called Reconstruction, the federal government tried to give newly freed African Americans access to basic civil rights, and by 1868, more than 700,000 Black men were registered to vote in the South. During Reconstruction, over 1,400 African Americans held federal, state, or local office, and more than 600 served in state assemblies. However, progress was short lived.

During the contested presidential election of 1876, Republicans and Democrats agreed to withdraw federal troops from key locations in the U.S. South, effectively ending Reconstruction. Southern states then willfully ignored the voting protections in the U.S. Constitution, and passed literacy tests, poll taxes, challenger laws, grandfather clauses, and other devices to prevent African Americans from voting. States also barred African Americans from serving on juries.

This targeted government action stripped African Americans of the political power they gained during Reconstruction. For example, in 1867, African American turnout was 90 percent in Virginia. After Virginia’s voter suppression laws took effect, the number of African American voters dropped from 147,000 to 21,000. During Reconstruction, 16 African American men held seats in Congress. From 1901 until the 1970s, not a single African American served in Congress.

These government actions returned white supremacists to power in local, state, and federal government. Historians have argued that racist lawmakers elected from the Southern states blocked hundreds of federal civil rights laws and rewrote many of the country’s most important pieces of legislation to exclude or discriminate against African Americans.

For example, the New Deal, a series of federal laws and policies designed to pull America out of the Great Depression, created the modern white middle class and many of the programs that Americans depend upon today, such as Social Security. Historians have argued that Southern lawmakers ensured that the GI Bill was administered by states instead of the federal government to guarantee that states could direct its funds mostly to white veterans. Similarly, in order to secure the support of white southern lawmakers, Congress included segregation clauses or rejected anti-discrimination clauses in the Hill Burton Act of 1946, which paid for our modern healthcare infrastructure, and in the Housing Act of 1949, which helped white Americans buy single family homes. These federal legislative decisions perpetuated the racial hierarchy which continues today.

V. Housing Segregation

Nationally
America’s racial hierarchy was the foundation of a system of segregation in the United States after the Civil War. The aim of segregation was not only to separate, but also to force African Americans to live in worse conditions in nearly every aspect of life. Government actors, working with private individuals, actively segregated America into African American and white neighborhoods. Although this system of segregation was called Jim Crow in the South, it existed by less obvious, yet effective, means throughout the entire country, including in California.

During enslavement, about 90 percent of African Americans were forced to live in the South. Immediately after the Civil War, the country was racially and geographically configured in ways that were different from the way it is segregated today. Throughout the 20th century, American federal, state, and local municipal governments expanded and solidified segregation efforts through zoning ordinances, slum clearance policies, construction of parks and freeways through the middle of African American neighborhoods, and public housing siting decisions. Courts enforced racially restrictive covenants and prevented homes from being sold to African Americans until the late 1940s.

The federal government used redlining to deny African Americans equal access to the capital needed to buy a single-family home at the same time that it subsidized white Americans’ efforts to own the same type of home. As President Herbert Hoover stated in 1931, single-family homes were “expressions of racial longing” and “[t]hat our people should live in their own homes is a sentiment deep in the heart of our race.”

The passage of the Fair Housing Act in 1968 outlawed housing discrimination, but did not fix the structures put in place by 100 years of discriminatory government policies; residential segregation continues today.

The average urban African American person in 1890 lived in a neighborhood that was only 27 percent African American. In 2019, America is as segregated as it was in the 1940s, with the average urban African American living in a neighborhood that is 44 percent African American. Better jobs, tax dollars, municipal services, healthy environments, good schools, access to health care, and grocery stores have followed white residents to the suburbs, leaving concentrated poverty, underfunded schools, collapsing infrastructure, polluted water and air, crime, and food deserts in segregated inner city neighborhoods.

California
California also passed and enforced laws to prevent African Americans from accumulating political power. California’s law prohibiting non-white witnesses from testifying against white Californians protected white defendants from justice. The California Supreme Court warned that allowing any non-white person to testify “would admit them to all the equal rights of citizenship, and we might soon see them at the polls, in the jury box, upon the bench, and in our legislative halls.”

California did not allow African American men to vote until 1879. The state also passed many of the voter suppression laws that were used in the South. California prohibited individuals convicted of felonies from voting, added a poll tax, and put in place a literacy test.

In California, the federal, state, and local governments created segregation through redlining, zoning ordinances, school and highway siting decisions, and discriminatory federal mortgage policy. California’s “sundown towns,” like most of the suburbs of Los Angeles and San Francisco, prohibited African Americans from living in towns throughout the state.
The federal government financed many whites-only neighborhoods throughout the state. The federal Home Owners’ Loan Corporation maps used in redlining described many Californian neighborhoods in racially discriminatory terms. For example, in San Diego there were “servant’s areas” of La Jolla and several areas “restricted to the Caucasian race.”

During World War II, the federal government paid to build segregated housing for defense workers in Northern California. Housing for white workers was more likely to be better constructed and permanent. While white workers lived in rooms paid for by the federal government, African American war workers lived in cardboard shacks, barns, tents, or open fields.

Racially-restrictive covenants, which were clauses in property deeds that usually allowed only white residents to live on the property described in the deed, were commonplace and California courts enforced them until at least the 1940s.

Numerous neighborhoods around the state rezoned African American neighborhoods for industrial use to keep out white residents or adopted zoning ordinances to ban apartment buildings to try and keep out African American residents.

State agencies demolished thriving African American neighborhoods in the name of urban renewal and park construction. Operating under a state law for urban redevelopment, the City of San Francisco declared that the Western Addition, a predominately African American neighborhood, was blighted, and destroyed the Fillmore, San Francisco’s most prominent African American neighborhood and business district. In doing so, the City of San Francisco closed 883 businesses, displaced 4,729 households, destroyed 2,500 Victorian homes, and damaged the lives of nearly 20,000 people. It then left the land empty for many years.

VI. Separate and Unequal Education

Nationally
Through much of American history, enslavers and the white political ruling class in America falsely believed it was in their best interest to deny education to African Americans in order to dominate and control them. Enslaving states denied education to nearly all enslaved people, while the North and Midwest segregated their schools and limited or denied education access to freed African Americans.

After slavery, southern states maintained the racial hierarchy by legally segregating African American and white children, and white-controlled legislatures funded African American public schools far less than white public schools. In 1889, an Alabama state legislator stated, “[e]ducation would spoil a good plow hand.” African American teachers received lower wages, and African American children received fewer months of schooling per year and fewer years of schooling per lifetime than white children.
Contrary to what most Americans are taught, the U.S. Supreme Court’s landmark 1954 case Brown v. Board of Education, which established that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional, did not mark the end of segregation.151

Nationally, nonwhite school districts get $23 Billion LESS than predominantly white districts

After Brown v. Board, many white people and white-dominated school boards throughout the country actively resisted integration.152 In the South, segregation was still in place through the early 1970s due to massive resistance by white communities.153 In the rest of the country, including California, education segregation occurred when governments supported residential segregation coupled with school assignment and sitting policies.154 Because children attended the schools in their neighborhood and school financing was tied to property taxes, most African American children attended segregated schools with less funding and resources than schools attended by white children.155

In 1974, the U.S. Supreme Court allowed this type of school segregation to continue in schools if it reflected residential segregation patterns between the city and the suburbs.156 In part, as a result of this decision and other U.S. Supreme Court decisions that followed, many public schools in the United States never integrated in the first place or were integrated and subsequently re-segregated.

California
In 1874, the California Supreme Court ruled that segregation in the state’s public schools was legal,157 a decision that predated the U.S. Supreme Court’s infamous “separate but equal” case, Plessy v. Ferguson, by 22 years.158

In 1966, as the South was in the process of desegregating, 85 percent of African American students in California attended predominantly minority schools, and only 12 percent of African American students and 39 percent of white students attended racially balanced schools.159 Like in the South, white Californians fought desegregation and, in a number of school districts, courts had to order districts to desegregate.160 Any progress attained through court-enforced desegregation was short-lived. Throughout the mid- to late-1970s, courts overturned, limited, or ignored desegregation orders in many California districts, as the U.S. Supreme Court and Congress limited methods to integrate schools.161 In 1979, California passed Proposition 1, which further limited desegregation efforts tied to busing.162

In the vast majority of California school districts, schools either re-segregated or were never integrated, so segregated schooling persists today. California is the sixth-most segregated state in the country for African American students.163 In California’s highly segregated schools, schools mostly attended by white and Asian children receive more funding and resources than schools mostly attended by African American and Latino children.164

VII. Racism in Environment and Infrastructure

Nationally
Due to residential segregation, African Americans have lived in poor-quality housing throughout American history, exposing them to disproportionate amounts of lead poisoning and increasing their risks of infectious disease.165 Segregated African American neighborhoods have more exposure to hazardous waste, oil and gas production, and automobile and diesel fumes, and are more likely to have inadequate public services like sewage lines and water pipes.166 African Americans are more vulnerable than white Americans to the dangerous effects of extreme weather patterns like heat waves, worsened by the effects of climate change.167

California
National patterns are replicated in California. African Americans in California are more likely than white Californians to live in overcrowded housing and near hazardous waste.168 African American neighborhoods are more likely to lack tree canopy169 and suffer from the consequences of water170 and air pollution.171 For instance, African American neighborhoods in the San Joaquin Valley were historically denied access to clean water.172
Executive Summary

VIII. Pathologizing the African American Family

Nationally
Government policies and practices have destroyed African American families throughout American history. After the Civil War, southern state governments re-enslaved children by making them “apprentices” and forcing them to labor for white Americans, who were sometimes their former enslavers. In the past century, both financial assistance and child welfare systems have based decisions on racist beliefs about African Americans, which continue to operate as badges of slavery.

Government-issued financial assistance has excluded African Americans from receiving benefits. In the early 1900s, state governments made support payments every month to low income single mothers to assist them with the expenses incurred while raising children. African American families were generally excluded, despite their greater need.

Scholars have found that racial discrimination exists at every stage of the child welfare process. Comparing equally poor African American and white families, studies have found that even with families considered to be at equal risk for future abuse, state agencies are more likely to remove African American children from their families than remove white children from their families.

As of 2019, African American children make up 14 percent of American children, but 23 percent of children in foster care. Studies have shown that this is likely not because African American parents mistreat their children more often, but rather due to poverty and racist systems.

Meanwhile, the criminal and juvenile justice systems have intensified these harms to African American families by imprisoning large numbers of African American youth and separating African American families.

California
Trends in California match those in the rest of the country. Recent California Attorney General investigations have found several school districts that punished African American students at higher rates than students of other races. A 2015 study ranked California among the five worst states in foster care racial disparities. African American children in California make up approximately 22 percent of the foster population, while making up only six percent of the general child population, a disparity far higher than the disparity in national percentages. Some counties in California—both urban and rural—have much higher disparities compared to the statewide average. In San Francisco County, which is largely urban and has around 800,000 residents, the percentage of African American children in foster care in 2018 was over 25 times the rate of white children.

IX. Control Over Creative, Cultural, & Intellectual Life

Nationally
During slavery, state governments controlled and dictated the forms and content of African American artistic and cultural production. After the Civil War, governments and politicians embraced minstrelsy, which was the popular racist and stereotypical depiction of African Americans through song, dance, and film. Federal and state governments failed to protect African American artists, culture-makers, and media-makers from discrimination and simultaneously promoted discriminatory narratives.

Federal and state governments allowed white Americans to steal African American art and culture with impunity—depriving African American creators of valuable copyright and patent protections. State governments denied African American entrepreneurs and culture-makers access to leisure sites, business licenses, and funding for leisure activities. State governments memorialized the Confederacy as just and heroic through monument building, while suppressing the nation’s history of racism and slavery. States censored cinematic depictions of discrimination against and integration of African Americans into white society.

Executive Summary

California
In California, city governments decimated thriving African American neighborhoods with vibrant artistic communities, like the Fillmore in San Francisco. Local governments in California have discriminated against, punished, and penalized African American students for their fashion, hairstyle, and appearance. State-funded California museums have excluded African American art from their institutions. California has criminalized African American rap artists, as California courts have allowed rap lyrics to be used as evidence related to street gang activity. California has also been home to numerous racist monuments and memorials for centuries.

X. Stolen Labor and Hindered Opportunity

Nationally
During slavery, the labor of enslaved African Americans built the infrastructure of the nation, filled the nation's coffers, and produced its main agricultural products for domestic consumption and export. Since then, federal, state, and local government actions directly segregated and discriminated against African Americans. In 1913, President Woodrow Wilson officially segregated much of the federal workforce. While African Americans have consistently served in the military since the very beginning of the country, the military has historically paid African American soldiers less than white soldiers and often deemed African Americans unfit for service until the military needed them to fight. Federal laws have also protected white workers while denying the same protections to African American workers, setting up and allowing private discrimination.

According to one meta-study, from 1989 to 2014, employment discrimination against African Americans had not decreased.

Approximately 85 percent of all African American workers in the United States at the time were excluded from the labor protections passed in the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act—protections like federal minimum wage, the maximum number of working hours before overtime pay is required, and limits on child labor. The Act essentially outlawed child labor in industrial settings, where most white children worked at the time, and allowed child labor in agricultural and domestic work, where most African American children worked.

Although federal and state laws like the Federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the California Fair Employment and Housing Act of 1959 prohibit discrimination, enforcement is slow and spotty. Federal and state policies like affirmative action produced mixed results and were short lived. African Americans continue to face employment discrimination today.

California
Several California cities did not hire African American workers until the 1940s, and certain public sectors continued to avoid hiring African American workers even in 1970. The San Francisco Fire Department, for example, had no African American firefighters before 1955, and by 1970, when African American residents made up 14 percent of the city's population, only four of the Department's 1,800 uniformed firefighters were African American. During the New Deal, several California cities invoked city ordinances to prevent African American federal workers from working within their cities. Labor unions excluded African American workers in California. Today, by some measures, two of California's major industries, Hollywood and Silicon Valley, employ disproportionately fewer African Americans.

XI. An Unjust Legal System

Nationally
American government at all levels criminalized African Americans for the purposes of social control, and to maintain an economy based on exploited African American labor.

After the Civil War, and throughout legal segregation, states passed numerous laws that criminalized African Americans when they performed everyday tasks, like stepping into the same waiting rooms as white Americans at bus stations or walking into a park for white people.
In the South, until the 1940s, African American men and boys were arrested on vagrancy charges or minor violations, fined, and forced to pay off their fine in a new system of de facto enslavement called convict leasing. \footnote{216} In the words of the Supreme Court of Virginia, they were “slaves of the state.” \footnote{217}

The convict leasing system in the South re-enslaved thousands of African American men and boys through the use of trumped up charges. \footnote{(1903)}

During the “tough on crime” and “War on Drugs” era, politicians continued to criminalize African Americans to win elections. President Richard Nixon’s domestic policy advisor explained that by “getting the public to associate the hippies with marijuana and blacks with heroin, and then criminalizing both heavily, [the Nixon White House] could disrupt those communities. . . . Did we know we were lying about the drugs? Of course we did.” \footnote{218}

The criminalization of African Americans is an enduring badge of slavery and has contributed to the over-policing of African American neighborhoods, the school to prison pipeline, the mass incarceration of African Americans, and other inequities in nearly every corner of the American legal system. \footnote{219}

It has also led to a rejection by police and mainstream media of accepting African Americans as victims. Law enforcement poorly investigates or ignores crimes against African American women. \footnote{220} African American children on average remain missing longer and are more likely to be missing than non-African American children. \footnote{221}

The American criminal justice system overall physically harms, imprisons, and kills African Americans more than other racial groups relative to their percentage of the population. \footnote{222} While constitutional amendments \footnote{223} and federal civil rights laws \footnote{224} have tried to remedy these injustices, scholars have argued that the U.S. criminal justice system is a new iteration of legal segregation. \footnote{225}

Like the rest of the country, California police stop, shoot, kill, and imprison more African Americans than their share of the population. \footnote{226} Police officers reported ultimately taking no action during a stop most frequently when stopping a person they perceived to be African American, suggesting there may have been no legitimate basis for the stop. \footnote{227} Additionally, a 2020 study showed that racial discrimination is an “ever-present” feature of jury selection in California. \footnote{228} The lingering effects of California’s punitive criminal justice policies, such as the state’s three-strikes law, have resulted in large numbers of African Americans in prisons and jails. \footnote{229}

XII. Mental and Physical Harm and Neglect

Nationally

The government actions described in this report have had a devastating effect on the health of African Americans. Compared to white Americans, African Americans live shorter lives and are more likely to suffer and die from almost all diseases and medical conditions than white Americans. \footnote{230} When they are hospitalized, African American patients with heart disease receive older, cheaper, and more conservative treatments than their white counterparts. \footnote{231}

Researchers have found that by some measures, this health gap has grown and cannot be explained by poverty alone. \footnote{232} As middle- and upper-class African Americans also manifest high rates of chronic illness and disability, \footnote{233} Researchers have linked these health outcomes in part to African Americans’ unrelenting experience of racism in our society. \footnote{234} Research suggests that race-related stress may have a greater impact on health among African Americans than diet, exercise, smoking, or income status. \footnote{235}

In addition to physical harm, African Americans experience anger, anxiety, paranoia, helplessness, hopelessness, frustration, resentment, fear, lowered self-esteem, and lower levels of psychological functioning as a result of racism. \footnote{236} These feelings can profoundly undermine African American children’s emotional and physical well-being and their academic success. \footnote{237}

California
These measures are similar in California. The life expectancy of an average African American Californian was 75.1 years, six years shorter than the state average. African American babies are more likely to die in infancy, and African American mothers giving birth die at a rate almost four times higher than the average Californian mother. Compared with white Californians, African American Californians are more likely to have diabetes, die from cancer, or be hospitalized for heart disease.

African American Californians suffer from high rates of serious psychological distress, depression, suicidal ideation, and other mental health issues. Unmet mental health needs are higher among African American Californians, as compared with white Californians, including lack of access to mental healthcare and substance abuse services. African American Californians have the highest rates of attempted suicide among all racial groups.

XIII. The Wealth Gap
Nationally
As described in further detail throughout this report, government policies perpetuating badges of slavery have helped white Americans accumulate wealth, while erecting barriers which prevented African Americans from doing the same.

Federal and California Homesteading Acts essentially gave away hundreds of millions of acres of land almost for free, mostly to white families. Today, as many as 46 million of their living descendants, approximately one-quarter of the adult population of the United States, reap the wealth benefits of these laws. In the 1930s and 1940s, the federal government created programs that subsidized low-cost loans, which allowed millions of average white Americans to own their homes for the first time. Of the $120 billion worth of new housing subsidized between 1934 and 1962, less than two percent went to nonwhite families. Other bedrocks of the American middle class, like Social Security and the GI Bill, also mostly excluded African Americans.

The federal tax structure has in the past and continues today to discriminate against African Americans.

These harms have compounded over generations, resulting in an enormous wealth gap that is the same today as it had been two years before the Civil Rights Act was passed in 1964. In 2019, the median African American household had a net worth of $24,100, 13 percent of the median net worth of white households at $188,200. This wealth gap persists regardless of education level and family structure and across all income levels.

California
The wealth gap exists in similar ways in California. A 2014 study of the Los Angeles metro area found that the median value of liquid assets for native born African American households was $200, compared to $110,000 for white households. California’s homestead laws similarly excluded African Americans before 1900 because they required a homesteader to be white. Throughout the 20th century, federal, state and local governments in California erected barriers to African American homeownership and supported or directly prohibited African Americans from living in suburban neighborhoods. Californians passed Proposition 209 in 1996, which prohibited the consideration of race in state contracting. One study has estimated that, as a result of Proposition 209, minority- and women-owned business enterprises have lost about $1 billion.
Key Findings of Part I

- In order to maintain slavery, colonial and American governments adopted white supremacist beliefs and passed laws in order to maintain a system that stole the labor and intellect of people of African descent. This system was maintained by and financially benefited the entire United States of America and its territories.

- This system of white supremacy is a badge of slavery and continues to be embedded today in numerous American and Californian legal and social systems. Throughout American history, this system has been upheld by federal, state, and local laws and policies and by violence and terror. All over the country, but particularly in the South during the era of legal segregation, federal, state, and local governments directly engaged in, supported, or failed to protect African Americans from the violence and terror aimed to subjugate African Americans.

- These government actions and derelictions of duty caused compounding physical and psychological injury for generations. In California, racial violence against African Americans began during slavery, continued through the 1920s, as groups like the Ku Klux Klan permeated local governments and police departments, and peaked after World War II, as African Americans attempted to move into white neighborhoods.

- After the Civil War, African Americans briefly won political power during Reconstruction. In response, southern states responded by systematically stripping African Americans of their power to vote. Racist lawmakers elected from southern states blocked hundreds of federal civil rights laws and edited important legislation to exclude or discriminate against African Americans, harming African American Californians.

- Government actors, working with private individuals, actively segregated America into African American and white neighborhoods. In California, federal, state, and local governments created segregation where none had previously existed through discriminatory federal housing policies, zoning ordinances, school siting decisions, and discriminatory federal mortgage policies known as redlining. Funded by the federal government, the California state and local government also destroyed African American homes and communities through park and highway construction, urban renewal, and by other means.

- Enslavers denied education to enslaved people in order to control them. Throughout American history, African American students across the country and in California have attended schools with less funding and resources than white students. After slavery, southern states passed laws to prevent African American and white students from attending the same schools. Throughout the country, children went to the school in their neighborhoods, so education segregation was created by residential segregation. Many public schools in the United States never integrated in the first place or were integrated and then re-segregated. Today, California is the sixth most segregated state in the country for African American students, who attend schools with less funding and resources than white students.

- Due to residential segregation, African Americans—compared to white Americans—are more likely to live in worse quality housing and in polluted neighborhoods with inadequate infrastructure. African American Californians face similar harms.

- Government-issued financial assistance has historically excluded African Americans from receiving benefits. The current child welfare systems in the country and in California operate on harmful and false racial stereotypes of African Americans. This has resulted in extremely high rates of African American children removed from their families, even though African American parents generally do not mistreat their children at higher rates than white parents.

- Federal and state governments, including California, failed to protect African American artists, culture-makers, and media-makers from discrimination and simultaneously promoted discriminatory narratives. State governments memorialized the Confederacy as just and heroic through monument building, while suppressing the nation's history of racism and slavery.

- Federal, state, and local government actions, including in California, have directly segregated and discriminated against African Americans at work. Federal and state policies like affirmative action produced mixed results and were short lived. African Americans continue to face employment discrimination today in the country and in California.

- American government at all levels, including in California, have historically criminalized African Americans for the purposes of social control, and to maintain an economy based on exploited African American labor. This criminalization is an enduring badge of slavery and has contributed to the over-policing of African American neighborhoods, the school to prison pipeline, the mass incarceration of African Americans, a refusal to accept African Americans as victims, and other inequities in nearly every corner of the American and California legal systems. As a result, the American and California criminal justice system physically harms, imprisons, and kills African Americans more than other racial groups relative to their percentage of the population.

• The government actions described in this report have had a devastating effect on the health of African Americans in the country and in California. Compared to white Americans, African Americans live shorter lives and are more likely to suffer and die from almost all diseases and medical conditions than white Americans. Researchers have linked these health outcomes in part to African Americans’ unrelenting experience of racism. In addition to physical harm, African Americans experience psychological harm, which can profoundly undermine African American children’s emotional and physical well-being and their academic success.

• Government laws and policies perpetuating badges of slavery have helped white Americans accumulate wealth, while erecting barriers which prevented African Americans from doing the same. These harms compounded over generations, resulting in an enormous gap in wealth today between white Americans and African Americans in the nation and in California.

PART II: INTERNATIONAL PRINCIPLES OF REPARATION AND EXAMPLES OF REPARATIVE EFFORTS

XIV. International Reparations Framework

AB 3121 requires the recommendations from the Reparations Task Force to “comport with international standards of remedy for wrongs and injuries caused by the state, that include full reparations and special measures, as understood by various relevant international protocols, laws, and findings.”258

The United Nations Principles on Reparation set forth a legal framework for providing full and effective reparations to victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law.259 The framework takes an expansive view of what it means to be a victim. The framework does not define the violations it covers, but the International Commission of Jurists has explained that they are the “types of violations that affect in qualitative and quantitative terms the most basic rights of human beings, notably the right to life and the right to physical and moral integrity of the human person.”260 Examples include genocide, slavery and slave trade, murder, enforced disappearances, torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and systematic racial discrimination.261 The Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide separately defines “genocide.”262

According to the international legal framework established by the United Nations Principles on Reparation, a full and effective reparations program must include all of the following: (1) Restitution; (2) Compensation; (3) Rehabilitation; (4) Satisfaction; and (5) Guarantees of non-repetition.263 The Task Force has sought to ensure that each of these components is addressed in its recommendations to the Legislature in this report, and reiterates to the Legislature that recommendations addressing each component would need to be implemented in order to achieve a reparations plan that complies with the international standard for reparations.

Restitution

“Restitution should, whenever possible, restore the victim to the original situation before the gross violations of international human rights law or serious violations of international humanitarian law occurred. Restitution includes, as appropriate: restoration of liberty, enjoyment of human rights, identity, family life and citizenship, return to one’s place of residence, restoration of employment and return of property.”

According to the International Commission of Jurists’ (ICJ) interpretation of the U.N. Principles on Reparation, where the state can return a victim to the status quo, the state has “an obligation to ensure measures for its restoration.”

However, even though restitution is considered the primary form of reparation, the ICJ acknowledges that “in practice,” restitution “is the least frequent, because it is mostly impossible to completely return [a victim] to the situation [they were in] before the violation, especially because of the moral damage caused to victims and their relatives.” So, the ICJ specifies that where complete restitution is not possible, as will often be the case, the state must “take measures to achieve a status as approximate as possible.” In situations where even this is not feasible, “the State has to provide compensation covering the damage arisen from the loss of the status quo ante.”

In order to satisfy this component of the international standards for an effective reparations program, the Task Force offers recommendations to the Legislature in Part IV of this report regarding how to appropriately calculate restitution for the whole class of individuals determined to be eligible for reparations.

Compensation

Compensation should be provided for any economically assessable damage, as appropriate and proportional to the gravity of the violation and the circumstances of each case, resulting from gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law, such as:

a. Physical or mental harm;

b. Lost opportunities, including employment, education and social benefits;

c. Material damages and loss of earnings, including loss of earning potential;

d. Moral damage;

e. Costs required for legal or expert assistance, medicine and medical services, and psychological and social services.

According to the ICJ’s interpretation of the U.N. Principles on Reparation, compensation is to be understood “as the specific form of reparation seeking to provide economic or monetary awards for certain losses, be they of material or immaterial, of pecuniary or non-pecuniary nature.” The ICJ highlights how compensation has been awarded by claims commissions for claims of “material and immaterial damage” and especially those involving “wrongful death or deprivation of liberty.” The United Nations has recognized a right to compensation “even where it is not explicitly mentioned” in a particular treaty, and the Human Rights Committee “recommends, as a matter of practice, that States should award compensation.” The basis for this recommendation comes from Article 2(3)(a) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. International jurisprudence divides compensation into “material damages” and “moral damages.” Material damages include, among other types, loss of actual or future earnings, loss of movable and immovable property, and legal costs. Moral damages include physical and mental harm.

In order to satisfy this component of the international standards for an effective reparations program, the Task Force offers recommendations to the Legislature in Part IV of this report regarding how to appropriately compensate those who are able to demonstrate that they have suffered specific compensable injuries.

Rehabilitation

“Rehabilitation should include medical and psychological care as well as legal and social services.” According to the ICJ’s interpretation of the U.N. Principles on Reparation, “victims are entitled to rehabilitation of their dignity, their social situation and their legal situation, and their vocational situation.” The ICJ also highlighted the Convention Against Torture’s assessment on what constitutes rehabilitation. Accordingly, “rehabilitation must be specific to the victim, based on an independent, holistic and professional evaluation of the individual’s needs, and ensure that the victim participates in the choice of service providers.” Furthermore, “the obligation to provide the means for as full rehabilitation as possible may not be postponed and does not depend on the available resources of the State.” Finally, rehabilitation “should include a wide range of inter-disciplinary... services, such as medical and psychological care, as well as legal and social services, community and family-oriented assistance and services; vocational training and education,” and “rectification of criminal records” or “invalidation of unlawful convictions.”

In order to satisfy this component of the international standards for an effective reparations program, the Task Force offers recommendations to the Legislature in Part V of this report regarding a wide variety of statutory and regulatory changes that the Legislature should enact in order to support rehabilitation of those eligible for the recommended programs.

Satisfaction

Under the U.N. Principles on Reparation, satisfaction should include, where applicable, any or all of the following:

a. Effective measures aimed at the cessation of continuing violations;

b. Verification of the facts and full and public disclosure of the truth to the extent that such disclosure does not cause further harm or threaten the safety and interests of the victim, the victim’s relatives, witnesses, or persons who have intervened to assist the victim or prevent the occurrence of further violations;

c. The search for the whereabouts of the disappeared, for the identities of the children abducted, and for the bodies of those killed, and assistance in the recovery, identification and reburial of the bodies in accordance with the expressed or presumed wish of the victims, or the cultural practices of the families and communities;

d. An official declaration or a judicial decision restoring the dignity, the reputation and the rights of the victim and of persons closely connected with the victim;

e. Public apology, including acknowledgment of the facts and acceptance of responsibility;

f. Judicial and administrative sanctions against persons liable for the violations;

g. Commemorations and tributes to the victims;

h. Inclusion of an accurate account of the violations that occurred in international human rights law and international humanitarian law training and in educational material at all levels.

According to the IJC’s interpretation of the U.N. Principles on Reparation, satisfaction is a “non-financial form of reparation for moral damage or damage to the dignity or reputation” that has “been recognized by the International Court of Justice.” Satisfaction can take the form of a condemnatory judgment, or the acknowledgment of truth, as well as the acknowledgment of responsibility and fault. The IJC also held that satisfaction includes “the punishment of the authors of the violation.” Furthermore, “the U.N. Updated Principles on Impunity recommend that the final report of truth commissions be made public in full.” This is supported by the U.N. Human Rights Commission’s resolution on impunity which recognizes that “for the victims of human rights violations, public knowledge of their suffering and the truth about the perpetrators, including their accomplices, of these violations are essential steps towards rehabilitation and reconciliation.”

Another important factor for satisfaction is a “public apology” and a “public commemoration.” A public apology helps “in restoring the honour, reputation or dignity of a [victim].” The public commemoration “is particularly important in cases of violations of the rights of groups or a high number of persons, sometimes not individually identified, or in cases of violations that occurred a long time in the past.” A public commemoration “in these cases has a symbolic value and constitutes a measure of reparation for current but also future generations.”

In order to satisfy this component of the international standards for an effective reparations program, the Task Force offers recommendations to the Legislature in Part III of this report, regarding the manner and scope of a formal apology, and in Part V of this report, regarding a variety of statutory and regulatory changes that should be enacted by the Legislature to achieve satisfaction. These recommendations are based on the fulsome accounting in Part I of this report, that addresses the need for a “full and public disclosure of the truth.” Additionally, Part VII of this report serves as a first step toward a more comprehensive program of satisfaction.
Executive Summary

a “full and public disclosure of the truth” by bringing forward data and elevating the stories regarding the harms suffered by the community. Part VIII of this report offers recommendations to the Legislature that would ensure that the public is educated about, and the steps needed to collectively redress, the harms. And finally, Part IX of this report offers a detailed accounting of the legal methods used to perpetuate a system of unequal justice, which the Task Force recommends the Legislature dismantle in order to ensure satisfaction.

Guarantees of Non-Repetition
Under the U.N. Principles on Reparation, guarantees of non-repetition should include, where applicable, any or all of the following measures:

a. Ensuring effective civilian control of military and security forces;

b. Ensuring that all civilian and military proceedings abide by international standards of due process, fairness and impartiality;

c. Strengthening the independence of the judiciary;

d. Protecting persons in the legal, medical and health care professions, the media and other related professions, and human rights defenders;

e. Providing, on a priority and continued basis, human rights and international humanitarian law education to all sectors of society and training for law enforcement officials as well as military and security forces;

f. Promoting the observance of codes of conduct and ethical norms, in particular international standards, by public servants, including law enforcement, correctional, media, medical, psychological, social service and military personnel, as well as by economic enterprises;

g. Promoting mechanisms for preventing and monitoring social conflicts and their resolution;

h. Reviewing and reforming laws contributing to or allowing gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law.

According to the ICJ’s interpretation of the U.N. Principles on Reparation, the guarantee of non-repetition derives from general international law. A guarantee of non-repetition is an aspect of “restoration and repair of the legal relationship affected by the breach.” According to the International Law Commission, “[a]ssurances and guarantees are concerned with the restoration of confidence in a continuing relationship.” A guarantee of non-repetition overlaps with international human rights law because “States have a duty to prevent human rights violations.” A guarantee of non-repetition is “required expressly” as part of the “legal consequences of [a state’s] decisions or judgments.” This express requirement is supported by the U.N. Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee, the Inter-American Court and Commission on Human Rights, the Committee of Ministers and Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, and the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights. Another measure that falls under the guarantee of non-repetition is “the necessity to remove officials implicated in gross human rights violations from office.” Finally, a guarantee of non-repetition can and often must involve “structural changes” that must be “achieved through legislative measures” to ensure that the violations cannot ever happen again.

While the U.N. Principles on Reparation are primarily based on the notion of government responsibility, the negotiators also reached a consensus that “non-State actors are to be held responsible for their policies and practices, allowing victims to seek redress and reparation on the basis of legal liability and human solidarity, and not [just] on the basis of State responsibility.” Principle 3(c) provides for equal and effective access to justice, “irrespective of who may ultimately be the bearer of responsibility for the violation.” Additionally, Principle 15 states, “[i]n cases where a person, a legal person, or other entity is found liable for reparation to a victim, such party should provide reparation to the victim or compensate the State if the State has already provided reparation to the victim.”

According to the international legal framework laid out by the UN Principles on Reparation, victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law should be provided with full and effective reparations. Victims are “persons who individually or collectively suffered harm, including physical or mental injury, emotional suffering, economic loss or substantial impairment of their fundamental rights, through acts or omissions that constitute gross violations of international human rights law, or serious violations of international humanitarian law.” Furthermore, “the term ‘victim’ also includes the immediate family or dependents of the direct victim and persons who have suffered harm in intervening to assist victims in distress or to prevent victimization.” Additionally, “[a] person shall be considered a victim regardless of whether the perpetrator of the violation is identified, apprehended, prosecuted, or convicted and regardless of the familial relationship between the perpetrator and the victim.”

Also, the ICJ has specified that for purposes of the UN Principles on Reparation, the definition of “victim” is meant to be broad. According to the ICJ, a “victim is not only the person who was the direct target of the violation, but any person affected by it directly or indirectly.” The ICJ cited how certain authorities “disfavor the distinction between direct and indirect victims,” so “[r]eparations programmes should use a wide and comprehensive definition of ‘victim’ and should not distinguish between direct and indirect victims.” A comprehensive definition of the word “victim” should include family members who have endured “unique forms of suffering as a direct result” of what happened to their families.

While the UN Principles on Reparation do not formally define “gross violations of international human rights law” or “serious violations of international humanitarian law,” the ICJ defines “gross violations” and “serious violations” as the “types of violations that affect in qualitative and quantitative terms the most basic rights of human beings, notably the right to life and the right to physical and moral integrity of the human person.” Examples of these types of violations include “genocide, slavery and slave trade, murder, enforced disappearances, torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, prolonged arbitrary detention, deportation or forcible transfer of population, and systematic racial discrimination.” The ICJ also held that “harm should be presumed in cases of gross human rights violations”

Victims of gross violations of international human rights law and serious violations of international humanitarian law are entitled to certain remedies under international law:

- Equal and effective access to justice;
- Adequate, effective and prompt reparation for harm suffered; and
- Access to relevant information concerning violations and reparation mechanisms.

According to the UN Human Rights Committee, “the right to an effective remedy necessarily entails the right to reparation.” An effective remedy refers to procedural remedies whereas the right to reparation refers to restitution, compensation, rehabilitation, satisfaction, and guarantees of non-repetition. Also, victims “shall have equal access to an effective judicial remedy as provided for under international law.” This would require a state to “establish functioning courts of law or other tribunals presided over by independent, impartial and competent individuals exercising judicial functions as a prerequisite to ensuring that victims have access to an effective judicial remedy.” This would also require the state to have “competent authorities to enforce the law and any such remedies that are granted by the courts and tribunals.”

In order to satisfy this component of the international standards for an effective reparations program, the Task Force offers recommendations to the Legislature in Part V of this report regarding a wide variety of statutory and regulatory changes to ensure non-repetition of the identified historical injustices. Additionally, Part VIII of this report offers recommendations to the Legislature that would ensure that the public is educated about and understands these harms. And finally, Part IX of this report offers an accounting of the legal methods used to perpetuate a system of unequal justice, which the Task Force recommends the Legislature dismantles in order to ensure non-repetition.

XV. Examples of Other Reparatory Efforts

International Reparatory Efforts

In carrying out the Legislature’s direction to address how the Task Force’s recommendations comport with international standards of remedy, the Task Force has considered and addressed worldwide examples of past and present attempts to remedy wrongs and injuries caused by state and private actors in other contexts, including attempts that have included full reparations. The Task Force examined the following initiatives:

International Germany-Israel

This reparations program was intended to address the harms inflicted on Jewish people who lived in Germany or in territories controlled by Germany during the Third Reich, the regime that ruled Germany from 1933 to 1945. Beginning in 1933, the Third Reich implemented several provisions to control and limit the citizenship and freedom of its Jewish citizens. Initially, the laws

excluded Jewish citizens from certain positions, schools, and professions. Eventually, these acts culminated in the “Final Solution,” the Holocaust, which was the genocide of the Jewish people through systematic killing inside and outside of concentration and extermination camps throughout Germany and territories controlled by Germany. In addition to these atrocities, about $6 billion in property was stolen from the Jewish people in Germany and territories controlled by Germany. Those that survived the concentration and extermination camps, and those who survived outside of camps in slave labor programs or by hiding, suffered significant physical and psychological injuries.

In September 1952, representatives of the newly established State of Israel and the newly formed Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) met in Luxembourg and signed an agreement that required the FRG to pay reparations to Israel for the material damage caused by the criminal acts perpetrated by Germany against the Jewish people in the Holocaust. Although the 1952 Luxembourg Agreement predates the United Nations General Assembly’s Principles on Reparation, which identify the five requirements for a full and effective reparations scheme, the Agreement comes close to fully embodying those principles. The 1952 Agreement consisted of three parts, two of which were protocols. The first part of the Agreement required the FRG to pay Israel three billion Deutschemarks (DM) to help resettle Jewish refugees in the new State of Israel. The DM3 billion sum would be paid in annual installments. The second part, Protocol 1, required the FRG to enact laws to compensate individuals. And the third part, Protocol 2, required the FRG to pay the Conference on Jewish Material Claims against Germany (Claims Conference) DM450 million.

In 1965, the FRG enacted the Federal Compensation Final Law. The Final Law made the following changes to the Agreement:

- It included compensation for health by easing the burden on claimants to prove damages to their health were caused by their earlier persecution, by including a presumption that if the claimant had been incarcerated for a year in a concentration camp, subsequent health problems could be causally linked to their persecution under the Nazi regime;
- The category for loss of life was expanded to include deaths that occurred either during persecution or within eight months after;
- The ceiling for education claims increased to DM10,000;
- And claims already adjudicated were to be revised based on the new law.

The Luxembourg Agreement was unique in many ways. It was the first reparations agreement that required a country to compensate another country that was not the victor in a war. Further, it was the first reparations program where the perpetrator paid reparations “on its own volition in order to facilitate self-rehabilitation.” And the Agreement was formed by two states that were “descendent’ entities of the perpetrators and the victims.”

The program was also the largest reparations program ever implemented. The German government received over 4.3 million claims for individual compensation, of which two million were approved. It is estimated that by 2000, Germany had paid more than DM82 billion ($38.6 billion) in reparations.
Moreover, the Agreement had significant economic and political consequences for Israel and the FRG.\textsuperscript{348} The treaty enabled a substantial trade relationship between the countries.\textsuperscript{349} During the period of enforcement for the treaty, they did not have political or diplomatic relations.\textsuperscript{350} But when reparations payments ceased in 1965, Israel and the FRG gradually initiated political relations.\textsuperscript{351}

The 1953, 1956, and 1965 Compensation Laws excluded compensation for forced and slave labor.\textsuperscript{352} But in 2000, Germany and seven other countries—including the United States—enacted the Forced and Slave Labor Compensation Law.\textsuperscript{353} Former slave laborers\textsuperscript{354} received DM15,000 ($7,500).\textsuperscript{355} Former forced laborers received DM5,000 ($2,500).\textsuperscript{356} Payments were limited to claimants only and not extended to descendants.\textsuperscript{357} However, heirs of anyone who died after February 1999, the date negotiations over compensation began, could file a claim.\textsuperscript{358} The Law also allowed for compensation of all non-Jewish survivors living outside the five Eastern European countries that signed the law.\textsuperscript{359} The International Organization for Migration processed those claims.\textsuperscript{360} By the claims deadline, it had received 306,000 claims.\textsuperscript{361}

Chile

Under the dictatorship of General Augusto Pinochet, from 1973 to 1990, the people of Chile experienced systematic state torture and violence: approximately 2,600 to 3,400 Chilean citizens were executed or “disappeared,” while another estimated 30,000 to 100,000 were tortured.\textsuperscript{362} In 1988, a plebiscite was held to determine whether General Pinochet should remain president of the country, and Pinochet lost.\textsuperscript{363} However, it was not until March 1990 that Patricio Aylwin was sworn in as President of the Republic of Chile.\textsuperscript{364}

One month after his inauguration, Aylwin created the National Truth and Reconciliation Commission.\textsuperscript{365} This eight-member commission was tasked with disclosing the human rights violations that occurred under the previous dictatorship, gathering evidence to allow for victims to be identified, and recommending compensation in a legal, financial, medical and administrative capacity.\textsuperscript{366} In February 1991, the Commission delivered its first report to the President, the Retting Report.\textsuperscript{367} President Aylwin sent a draft bill on victim compensation to Congress; the bill used the recommended measures of compensation from the Retting Report.\textsuperscript{368} The bill was approved and signed into law (Law 19.123) on February 8, 1992.\textsuperscript{369}

Law 19.123 established the National Corporation for Reparation and Reconciliation with the purpose of coordinating, carrying out, and promoting actions needed to comply with the recommendations contained in the Report of the National Truth and Reconciliation Commission.\textsuperscript{370} As written in Law 19.123, the Corporation was tasked to achieve all of the following:

- Promoting reparations for the moral injury caused to the victims of the Pinochet regime and providing the social and legal assistance needed by their families to access the benefits of the law;\textsuperscript{371}
- Promoting and assisting actions aimed at determining the whereabouts and circumstances surrounding the disappearance or death of people at the hands of the Pinochet regime;\textsuperscript{372}
- Serving as repository for the information collected by the National Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the National Corporation for Reparation and Reconciliation, and all information on cases and matters similar that may be compiled in the future. The Corporation was authorized to request, collect, and process information in the possession of public or private institutions regarding human rights violations or political violence during the Pinochet regime;\textsuperscript{373}
- Conducting research and making decisions in certain cases, regarding whether the person was a victim of human rights violations or political violence.\textsuperscript{374}
- Entering into agreements with nonprofit institutions or corporations to provide the professional assistance needed to carry out the aims of the Corporation, including medical benefits.\textsuperscript{375}
- Making proposals for consolidating a culture of respect for human rights in the country.\textsuperscript{376}
Law 19.123 also established a monthly pension for the families of the victims of human rights violations or political violence as identified in the report by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. The Institute of Pension Normalization was placed in charge of paying the pensions throughout the country. Article 24 of the law established that the pension was compatible with any other benefits that the beneficiary was receiving at the moment, or would receive in the future, as well as any other social security benefits. In 1996, the monthly pension amounted to 226,667 Chilean pesos, or around $537. This figure was used as a reference for estimating the different amounts provided to each type of beneficiary as defined in Law 19.123.

In the years since its enactment, there have been public criticisms of the restitution or compensation measures enacted. For example, some have objected to allowing compensation based on the presumed death of some victims, while others have expressed a mistrust in the creation of a public interest corporation with little oversight and limited ability to investigate the whereabouts of disappeared detainees. Others have criticized the single pension model that does not take into account the number of members in each family in determining the amount of restitution. Law 19.123 also excluded certain beneficiaries (unmarried partners, victims without children, and mothers of children of unknown parentage).

In 2005, the Chilean government decided to provide 28,459 registered victims or their relatives with lifelong governmental compensation (approximately $200 per month) and free education, housing, and health care.

South Africa

Apartheid was an institutional regime of racial segregation and systemic oppression, implemented in South Africa to deprive the majority Black South African population of basic rights and secure the white minority’s power over the country. Similar to the United States’s system of segregation, de jure racial segregation was widely practiced in South Africa since the first white settlers arrived in the region. When the National Party gained control of the government in 1948, it expanded the policy of racial segregation, naming the system apartheid. This system of “separate development” was furthered by the Population Registration Act of 1950, which classified all South Africans as either Bantu (all Black South Africans), “Coloured” (those of mixed race), or white. Another piece of legislation, the Group Areas Act of 1950, established residential and business sections in urban areas for each race, and barred members of other races from living, operating businesses, or owning land in areas designated for a different race. The law was designed to remove thousands of “Coloureds,” Black South Africans, and Indians from areas classified for white occupation. As a result of several laws, specifically, the Population Registration Act, the Group Areas Act, and several “Land Acts” adopted between 1913 and 1955, more than 80 percent of South Africa’s land was set aside for the white minority.

To enforce the segregation of the races and prevent Black South Africans from encroaching on white areas, the government strengthened existing “pass” laws, requiring “nonwhites to carry documents authorizing their presence in restricted areas.” Many private companies, including some based in the United States and Europe, enabled apartheid by manufacturing the military and police vehicles used to enforce segregation, or by creating the document system that stripped Black South Africans of their citizenship and rights.

In 1995, following the election of Nelson Mandela as the country’s first non-white president, the South African government passed the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act (Act) to help transition South Africa out of the apartheid era and into a democracy in which Black South Africans would have full participation. To make that transition, the Act created the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (Commission), which operated through three committees: the Committee on Human Rights Violations, which investigated the gross human rights violations committed during the apartheid regime; the Committee on Reparations and Rehabilitation (CRR), which developed final compensation policy recommendations to address the harms suffered by the victims of the gross human rights abuses committed to uphold apartheid; and the Amnesty Committee, which was responsible for determining which perpetrators of gross human rights violations would receive amnesty for civil and criminal liability for their crimes.397

In its final policy recommendations, the CRR recommended financial and symbolic compensation reparations as well as community rehabilitation programs and institutional reforms.398 To ensure successful implementation, the CRR also recommended that the government appoint a national body to implement the programs and a secretariat within the office of the President or the Vice President to oversee implementation.399 The government adopted some of the CRR’s symbolic reparation recommendations, community rehabilitation program recommendations, and institutional reforms.400 The government paid reburial expenses to 47 families of disappeared persons whose remains were found and reburied, and enacted regulations to integrate institutions. There were also improvements made in housing, education, and access to medical care for Black South Africans.401

The South African government did not adopt the CRR’s financial recommendations nor its recommendation to appoint a national implementing body.402 In 2003, five years after the CRR submitted its final reparations policy recommendations, the South African government paid a one-time payment of 30,000 Rand (R) to some of the 22,000 victims.403 The payment was about one-fifth of the amount the CRR recommended that the government pay in individual reparations grants to adequately compensate victims for their suffering.404 By 2004, about 10 percent of the confirmed victims had still not received their payment.405

The Commission’s CRR was also responsible for developing both the Urgent Interim Reparations policy program (UIR) and making final policy recommendations to the President.406 The UIR was an interim financial compensation program.407 The UIR regulations required referrals and financial assistance to access services necessary to meet urgent medical, emotional, educational, material, and symbolic needs to applicants whose requirements the CRR deemed urgent.408 The UIR payments were calculated based on need and the number of the victim’s dependents, ranging from a maximum of R2000 ($250) for a victim with no dependents to a maximum of R5705 ($713) for those with five or more dependents.409 The first UIR payments were made in July 1998.410 The UIR “process was mostly completed in April 2001.”411 The President’s Fund paid out about R44,000,000 ($5.5 million) in cash payments to 14,000 victims for three years.412

Some critics of the UIR program criticize the lack of information shared with victims about the Commission.413 Specifically, victims were not given information about how the Commission was organized or how it functioned.414 Thus, they were not empowered to engage with the Commission, nor were they knowledgeable about the next steps in the restitution process.415 And they received little information regarding the perpetrators the Amnesty Committee was considering for amnesty.416

Canada

Indigenous children in Canada were sent to residential schools from the 1600s until the mid-1990s, where they suffered severe abuses.417 First established by Roman Catholic and Protestant churches, and based on claimed racial, cultural, and spiritual superiority, residential schools were an attempt to separate Indigenous children from their traditional cultures and convert them to Christianity.418 The passage of the Indian Act in 1876 formally gave the federal government the power to educate and assimilate Indigenous people in Canada, and the Act’s 1894 amendment made attendance at residential schools mandatory.419 Starting in the 1880s, the Canadian government established and expanded the residential school system, ostensibly to assimilate Indigenous peoples into settler society and to reduce Indigenous dependence on public assistance.420
There were 130 residential schools in Canada between 1831 and 1996. During this time, more than 150,000 First Nations, Métis, and Inuit children were forced to attend these schools. Thousands of Indigenous children died at school or as a result of their experiences in school, while many remain missing. Children were forced to leave their homes, parents, and often their siblings, as the schools were segregated based on gender. Indigenous culture was disparaged from the moment the children arrived at school, where they were required to give up their traditional clothes and wear new uniforms, the boys had their hair cut, and many students were given new names. At some schools, children were banned from speaking their native language, even in letters home to their parents. The Christian missionary staff at these schools emphasized Christian traditions while simultaneously denigrating Indigenous spiritual traditions. Physical and sexual abuse were common. Many children were underfed, and malnutrition and poor living conditions led to preventable diseases such as tuberculosis and influenza.

Indigenous communities struggled to heal the harm done by these residential schools, and starting in 1980, former students campaigned for the government and churches to acknowledge the abuses of this system and provide some compensation. In 1996, a group of 27 former students filed a class action lawsuit against the Government of Canada and the United Church of Canada. Thousands of other former students began to sue the federal government and churches. The federal government issued a Statement of Reconciliation in 1998 that recognized the abuses of the residential school system and established the Aboriginal Healing Foundation. In 2001, the federal government created the Office of Indian Residential Schools Resolution Canada to manage the abuse claims of other former students began to sue the federal government and churches. The Canadian government entered into the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement. It acknowledged the damage Canada inflicted on its Indigenous peoples through the residential school system and established a multibillion-dollar fund to help former students recover. The Agreement has five main components: the Common Experience Payment; Independent Assessment Process; the Truth and Reconciliation Commission; Commemoration; and Health and Healing Services. The Settlement Agreement allocated $1.9 billion to the Common Experience Payment for all former students of the residential schools. Every former student was given $10,000 for the first year at school and $3,000 for each additional year. By the end of 2012, 98 percent of the 80,000 eligible former students received payments.

The Independent Assessment Process provided a mechanism to resolve sexual and serious physical and psychological abuse claims. By the end of 2012, it had provided more than $1.7 billion to former students.

The Settlement Agreement also allocated $60 million to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission for five years so that individuals, families, and communities could tell their stories, and the Commission held national events to bring public attention to this issue. The Commission issued a report in December 2015 entitled, Honouring the Truth, Reconciling for the Future, that documented the experiences of the 150,000 survivors. The Settlement Agreement also allocated $20 million for commemorative projects and $125 million for the Aboriginal Healing Foundation. It also established the Indian Residential Schools Resolution Health Support Program, which provides former students with mental health resources provided by elders. Indigenous community health workers, psychologists, and social workers.

In January 2023, Canada also agreed to pay $2.8 billion to settle the latest in a series of lawsuits seeking compensation for the harm to Indigenous communities through the residential schools. This settlement is a resolution of a class action lawsuit initially filed by 325 First Nations in 2012 seeking compensation for the destruction of their languages and culture. Under this settlement, the federal government agreed to establish a trust fund for Indigenous communities to use for educational, cultural, and language programs. A federal court judge approved the $2.8 billion settlement in March 2023, noting that it was “fair, reasonable, and in the best interests” of the plaintiffs. The agreement allows the First Nations communities themselves to decide what to do with these funds based on the “four pillars” principles outlined in the agreement: the revival and protection of Indigenous language; the revival and protection of Indigenous culture; the protection and promotion of heritage; and the wellness of Indigenous communities and their members. The settlement was to go to an appeal period, after which the money would be managed by a board of Indigenous leaders through a nonprofit fund. The settlement does not release the federal government from future lawsuits involving children who died or disappeared at the residential schools.

Domestic Reparatory Efforts

History of the Reparations Movement in the United States

The earliest calls for reparations for African Americans precede the Civil War, with enslaved people demanding compensation for their labor and bondage. In 1783, Belinda Sutton, a formerly enslaved woman in...
Massachusetts, petitioned the Massachusetts General Court for a pension from the estate of her enslaver, Isaac Royall, Jr. Sutton's petition is one of the first examples of African Americans demanding reparations. The court granted her petition, partially due to Royall’s resistance to American independence and allegiance to King George III.

Calls for reparatory justice gained momentum at the end of the Civil War, after the federal government failed to fulfill General William T. Sherman’s promise to give forty acres and a mule to those who were formerly enslaved. African American abolitionist Frederick Douglass demanded land distribution for the formerly enslaved, comparing their plight to the Russian serfs who received land grants following their emancipation.

In the late 1800s, African American freedmen led the call for reparations, Callie House and Isaiah Dickerson chartered the first national reparations organization, the National Ex-Slave Mutual Relief, Bounty, and Pension Association (MRBPA), in Nashville, in 1898. The MRBPA grew to 300,000 members by 1916. Their mission included: (1) identifying the formerly enslaved and adding their names to the petition for a pension; (2) lobbying Congress to provide pensions for the nation’s estimated 1.9 million formerly enslaved—21 percent of all African Americans by 1899; (3) starting local chapters and providing members with financial assistance when they became incapacitated by illness; and (4) providing a burial assistance payment when a member died. MRBPA filed a lawsuit against the federal government on behalf of African American freedmen and their ancestors for the value of the cotton that had been grown and harvested by persons “subject to a system of involuntary servitude” in the South between 1859 and 1868. The MRBPA petitioned for $68 million—the money the government collected from the “Internal Revenue Tax on Raw Cotton” on the cotton they produced. The claim was denied based on government immunity. The U.S. Supreme Court affirmed.

The MRBPA faced strong opposition from the U.S. government. In 1916, the government indicted Callie House for fraud, claiming that the leaders of MRBPA obtained money from the formerly enslaved by fraudulent circulars advertising that reparations from the government were forthcoming. House was convicted and served time in a penitentiary in Missouri.

Another reparations trailblazer was “Queen Mother” Audley Moore, known as the “Mother” of the modern reparations movement. Moore founded several organizations, including the Committee for Reparations for Descendants of U.S. Slaves, dedicated to fighting for land and other reparations for African Americans. In the 1950s she formally petitioned the U.N. for reparations for African Americans.

In the 1960s, many civil rights and Black Nationalist groups also demanded reparatory justice, in addition to legal equality. For example, the Black Panther Party’s Ten-Point Program called for the “end to the robbery by the [w]hite man of our Black community” and demanded the debt owed of forty acres and two mules. In a speech to students at Michigan State University in 1963, Malcolm X called for reparations:

The greatest contribution to this country was that which was contributed by the Black man . . . Now, when you see this, and then you stop and consider the wages that were kept back from millions of Black people, not for one year but for 310 years, you’ll see how this country got so rich so fast. And what made the economy as strong as it is today. And all that, and all of that slave labor that was amassed in unpaid wages, is due someone today.

The publication of the 2014 essay, The Case for Reparations, by Ta-Nehisi Coates in The Atlantic, refocused the country’s attention on reparations. And in the summer of 2020, the murder of George Floyd by police in Minneapolis sparked racial justice protests across the country that further pushed demands for reparations to the forefront of public conversation. Reparations was also an issue in the 2020 Democratic presidential primary. In April 2021, H.R. 40, sponsored by U.S. Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee, was voted out of the House Judiciary Committee for the first time, but failed to receive consideration by the full House of Representatives in the 117th Congress (2021-2022).

In the absence of federal action, states, cities, and municipalities have taken calls for reparations into their own hands. For example, California, with AB 3121, the Task Force, and this report, has begun the process of developing a reparations program specific to our state’s experience. Nevertheless, this Task Force trusts that the federal government will develop a national solution to what is ultimately a national responsibility.

U.S. Indian Claims Commission

The United States Indian Claims Commission (Commission or ICC) was established in 1946 through federal legislation. The ICC was ostensibly established to redress the harms inflicted on native populations during the campaign of colonization and relocation of the late 18th and 19th centuries. The government’s inhumanity and the atrocities committed during this period were diverse and devastating. The government’s actions included the widespread killing of Native Americans that many, including California Governor Gavin Newsom, have called a genocide, and a staggering theft of Native American land. Spurred by the doctrine of Manifest Destiny, the government acquired nearly two billion acres of land from Indigenous peoples, leaving just 140 million acres under Native control. This dispossession was accomplished by various means, including outright conquest, treaty, executive order, and federal statute. Although the government’s abuses during this period were far-reaching, the ICC’s focus was solely on land transactions, mostly notably the treaty process.

The ICC was authorized to adjudicate tribal land claims, but it was limited to awarding monetary relief and did not have jurisdiction to restore title to land. The authorizing legislation permitted various claims, including those premised on “fraud, duress, [and] unconscionable consideration” as well as those based on “fair and honorable dealings.” The congressional Committee on Indian Affairs stated that the bill was “primarily designed to right a continuing wrong to our Indian citizens for which no possible justification can be asserted.” Indeed, the majority of claims alleged that “the United States acquired valuable land for unconscionably low prices in bargains struck between unequals.” Another large swath of claims alleged that the government had failed to abide by treaty provisions and called for an historical accounting, including in instances where the government was alleged to have mismanaged tribal funds.

The Commission initially comprised three members, all appointed by President Harry Truman. The ICC acted as a “quasi-judicial branch of the legislature” that considered voluminous documentary and testimonial evidence, rendered rulings on motions, and presided over trials. Claims could be filed only during the first five years of the Commission, and within that filing period 370 petitions were submitted and later divided into more than 600 dockets. Neither the statute of limitations nor doctrine of laches could be raised as a defense to tribal claims, but all other defenses were available to the government.

The ICC was initially set to terminate ten years after its first meeting, but its lifespan was repeatedly extended until its termination in 1978. Individual cases often took several years to complete, and the appeal process alone typically took between eight months and three years.
years. During its tenure, the Commission adjudicated more than 500 claims and issued tribal awards in over 60 percent of matters. It awarded approximately $800 million in total compensation to tribal claimants. At its termination in 1978, the Commission had not fully cleared its docket, and the remaining matters were transferred to the Court of Claims.

Historians and legal scholars have argued that the Commission did not go nearly far enough to address the centuries-long slaughter, displacement, and oppression of Native Americans. The Commission was not empowered to convey land back to tribes, yet its rulings have barred all subsequent claims, including those to repossess land. Nor did the Commission address the Native Americans’ obligation to retain counsel at their own cost diminished any eventual financial award. In the rare claim premised on a Fifth Amendment “taking,” the Commission ruled that interest on amounts owed was not recoverable. The unpaid interest was estimated by the U.S. Solicitor General to have been several billion dollars.

A core defect in the ICC’s structure and practice was the adversarial rather than investigative nature of the proceedings. One scholar has observed that “the Commission, submissive to the requests of the lawyers who practice before it, has provided for a bewildering series of hearings on title, value offset, attorneys’ fees and all the motions that any party chooses to present.” Moreover, the government’s role as an adversary to the claimants meant that government attorneys often aggressively fought against proper compensation for tribal claimants, and as a matter of policy the Attorney General did not pursue settlement. Finally, the Native Americans’ obligation to retain counsel at their own cost diminished any eventual financial award. In light of these and other inefficiencies, many have argued that the Commission should have operated as an investigative rather than quasi-judicial body. Indeed, the Commission was statutorily authorized to conduct its own investigations, but it rarely employed these powers and instead consistently acted as a tribunal.

Tuskegee Study of Untreated Syphilis in the Negro Male

The Tuskegee Study of Untreated Syphilis in the Negro Male (Study) was conducted in Macon County, Alabama between 1932 and 1972 on the campus of the Tuskegee Institute. The Study was intended to observe the natural history of untreated syphilis in African American men. A total of 600 African American men were enrolled in the Study and told by researchers that they were being treated for “bad blood,” which colloquially in the region referred to a number of diagnosable ailments including, but not limited to, anemia, fatigue, and syphilis. The African American men in the Study were only told they were receiving free health care from the federal government of the United States. Although there were no proven treatments for syphilis when the study began, penicillin became the standard treatment for the disease in 1947; however, the medicine was withheld from those enrolled in the study, resulting in blindness, deteriorating mental health, severe health issues, and sometimes death.

Following a leak of the Study and subsequent reporting by the Associated Press in July 1972, international public outcry led to a series of actions taken by U.S. federal agencies. The Assistant Secretary for Health and Scientific Affairs appointed an Ad Hoc Advisory Panel that concluded that there was evidence that the Study routinely ignored scientific research protocols necessary to ensure the safety and well-being of the human subjects involved.

Although there were no proven treatments for syphilis when the Tuskegee study began, penicillin became the standard treatment for the disease in 1947; however, the medicine was withheld from those enrolled in the study, resulting in blindness, deteriorating mental health, severe health issues, and sometimes death.
The federal government in 1974 enacted legislation to study and write regulations governing studies involving human participants and to implement policy changes to protect human subjects in biomedical and behavioral research.\(^{535}\)

Following a 1994 symposium studying the Tuskegee Syphilis experiments, the Tuskegee Syphilis Study Legacy Committee was formed\(^{536}\) and issued its final report in 1996, seeking to: (1) persuade President Bill Clinton to apologize to the surviving Study participants, their families, and to the Tuskegee community; and (2) develop a strategy to redress the damages caused by the Study and to transform its damaging legacy.\(^{537}\)

In 1997, President Clinton formally apologized and held a ceremony at the White House for surviving Tuskegee Study participants.\(^{538}\) Along with the apology, President Clinton pledged a $200,000 planning grant to help Tuskegee University build a Center for Bioethics in Research and Health Care.\(^{539}\) President Clinton also announced the creation of bioethics fellowships for minority students and extended the life of the National Bioethics Advisory Commission to 1999.\(^{540}\) Additionally, the President directed the Health and Human Services Secretary to draft a report outlining ways to better involve all communities—especially minority communities—in research and health care.\(^{541}\)

In 2022, the Milbank Memorial Fund—the foundation that paid the funeral expenses of the deceased Study participants as an incentive for their participation—publicly apologized to descendants of the Study’s victims for its role in the Study.\(^{542}\)

Japanese American Incarceration

On February 19, 1942, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066, which ordered the incarceration of Japanese Americans and created a zone “from which any or all persons may be excluded,” at the discretion of the Secretary of War or appropriate military commander, from the whole of California, the western halves of Washington State and Oregon, and the southern third of Arizona.\(^{543}\) By the fall of 1942, all Japanese Americans were evicted from California and sent to one of ten incarceration camps that were built to imprison them.\(^{544}\) Many incarcerated persons lost their property and assets as they were prohibited from taking more than what they could carry with them, and what remained was either sold, confiscated, or destroyed in government storage.\(^{545}\) Over a hundred thousand Japanese Americans were incarcerated in desolate camps, for up to four years.\(^{546}\)

In 1980, the United States Congress and President Jimmy Carter approved the Commission on the Wartime Internment and Relocation of Civilians (CWRIC).\(^{547}\) The CWRIC was established to: (1) review the facts and circumstances surrounding the relocation and incarceration of thousands of American civilians during World War II under Executive Order 9066 during World War II; (2) review directives of United States military forces requiring the relocation and incarceration of American citizens, including Aleut civilians and permanent resident aliens of the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands; and (3) recommend appropriate remedies.\(^{548}\) In December 1982, the Commission released a 467-page report, Personal Justice Denied, detailing the history and circumstances of the wartime treatment of people of Japanese ancestry and the people of the Aleutian Islands.\(^{549}\)

The findings and recommendations of the CWRIC, among other events, helped bring about the passage of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988 to acknowledge and provide redress for the incarceration of Japanese Americans in the United States between 1942 and 1946.\(^{550}\) The federal government’s plan included a cash payment of $20,000 for each surviving incarcerated person and a program to fund public education of the events.\(^{551}\)

Under the Act, the United States Attorney General was charged with locating eligible individuals,\(^{552}\) and by 1999, redress payments had been distributed to approximately 82,220 claimants.\(^{553}\)

The Civil Liberties Act of 1988 also established the Civil Liberties Public Education Fund within the U.S. Treasury, administered by the Secretary of the Treasury, and available for disbursements by the Attorney General and by the newly established Civil Liberties Public Education Fund Board of Directors.\(^{554}\) The trust totaled $1,650,000,000, and the fund would terminate once the money was exhausted or 10 years after the enactment of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988. The Act also called upon each department and agency of the U.S. Government to review with liberality, giving full consideration to the findings of the CWRIC, any application by an eligible individual for the restitution of any position, status, or entitlement lost because of any discriminatory act of the U.S. Government against those of Japanese ancestry during the period of incarceration. Finally, along with the Act’s payments, the Government offered a formal apology to each surviving incarcerated person.

September 11, 2001
The militant network al-Qaeda carried out four coordinated terrorist attacks against the United States on September 11, 2001, commonly known as 9/11. The incineration of the Twin Towers and the crashed aircrafts released clouds of noxious toxins in Lower Manhattan. First responders, volunteers, and residents near Ground Zero inhaled harmful dust, smoke, toxic chemicals, and particle remnants. This toxic exposure subsequently caused various illnesses, including more than 60 types of cancer, respiratory conditions, and digestive disorders. Thousands of survivors and first responders have been diagnosed with 9/11-related illnesses, and thousands more have died.

Almost immediately after the September 11 attacks, Congress passed the Air Transportation Safety and Stabilization Act, which enacted the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund (VCF). This bill sought to bring financial relief to any individual, or relative of a deceased individual, who was physically injured or killed as a result of the terrorist attacks. The claims window for VCF closed in 2004.

The VCF was reopened on January 2, 2011, when President Barack Obama signed the James Zadroga 9/11 Health and Compensation Act of 2010 (Zadroga Act). While the original VCF only covered the victims (or their heirs) who were either killed or injured as a direct result of the 9/11 terrorist attacks, the Zadroga Act expanded the VCF to compensate victims for injury or death related to the debris removal process conducted in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks, and exposure to the toxic air in Lower Manhattan and the other attack sites. The new claim filing deadline was October 2016. The Zadroga Act also established the World Trade Center Health Program to provide medical monitoring and treatment for responders and survivors with chronic health conditions arising from the 9/11 attacks. In contrast to the World Trade Center Health Program, the VCF does not cover mental health conditions.

In 2015, the Zadroga Act was reauthorized and extended until December 2020. Certain award calculations were changed. The original VCF paid an average death claim award of over $2 million and awarded anywhere from $500 to over $8.6 million in personal injury claims. Due to budgetary considerations, the 2015 reauthorization of the Zadroga Act limited the maximum amounts individuals could receive as compensation. It capped awards for non-economic loss from cancer conditions at $250,000, awards for non-economic loss from non-cancer conditions at $90,000, and awards for loss of annual income at $200,000.

The VCF was designed to be a compensation scheme in lieu of tort litigation for the economic and noneconomic losses incurred by victims who were physically injured and families of victims whose lives were taken as a result of the 9/11 attacks. Claimants who participated in this compensation scheme waived their right to sue for damages for injury or death as a result of the attacks. A compensation fund was chosen as an alternative to potential class action toxic tort litigation because it was determined to be a more efficient and effective solution for compensating victims. It was enacted to relieve victims and their families from navigating through the legal system and possibly having their claims failing due to government immunity or other potential bars.\textsuperscript{560} The VCF has received inconsistent funding. In the two decades since the 9/11 attacks, the Fund has struggled to meet rising medical costs and cancer rates.\textsuperscript{581} Many exposure symptoms and 9/11-related diseases took years to manifest.\textsuperscript{582} The VCF’s most recent five-year extension only lasted until 2020.\textsuperscript{583} In February 2019, a Special Master determined that the then-current funding was insufficient to pay the remaining pending and projected VCF claims, and announced that award amounts would need to be reduced.\textsuperscript{584} In response to public outrage, the VCF was permanently authorized in July 2019, ensuring that the VCF has sufficient funding to pay all pending claims and all future claims filed by October 1, 2090.\textsuperscript{585} It also allows for supplemental compensation to any victim whose previous award had been reduced due to the previous budgetary restrictions.\textsuperscript{586}

The VCF’s efficacy has also been impacted by some claimants providing inadequate documentation for their claim or filing premature claims. According to the VCF’s 2022 Annual Report, 54 percent of claims are de-activated for failure to provide the minimum required information, 41.9 percent of all claims are submitted with insufficient proof of presence documents, and 32.3 percent do not have a certified physical condition at the time the claim is filed.\textsuperscript{587}

\textbf{Sandy Hook Elementary School}

On December 14, 2012, a gunman shot and murdered 20 children and six adult staff members at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newton, Connecticut, after killing his own mother.\textsuperscript{588} The gunman used two high-powered rifles, two semi-automatic pistols, as well as several hundred rounds of ammunition stored in high-capacity magazines; his mother had lawfully purchased several of the guns.\textsuperscript{589} When he arrived at the school, he shot and killed the school’s principal and school psychologist.\textsuperscript{590} Teachers, who heard the gunshots, entered lockdown procedures, but he was able to enter a classroom where he killed the teacher and fourteen children.\textsuperscript{591} He entered a second classroom and killed the teacher and six students; he also killed a special education aide and a behavioral therapist.\textsuperscript{592} When police arrived at the school, they discovered that the gunman had killed himself.\textsuperscript{593} It is the deadliest mass shooting at an elementary school in U.S. history and the second deadliest school shooting overall.\textsuperscript{594} The school was demolished in 2014 and replaced by a new building in 2016.\textsuperscript{595}

In 2013, Connecticut Governor Dannel P. Malloy established the Sandy Hook Advisory Commission and directed it to review current policy and make specific recommendations in the areas of public safety, with particular attention paid to school safety, mental health, and gun violence prevention.\textsuperscript{596} The Commission concluded that the shooter acted alone, but did not identify a motive.\textsuperscript{597} The Commission made several recommendations, including investment in mental health professionals, funding for short-term and long-term recovery plans, and behavioral health and education responses to crisis events.\textsuperscript{598}

After the shootings, the federal government gave the town of Newton and several agencies related to Sandy Hook over $17 million in aid, used primarily to enhance mental health services and school security.\textsuperscript{599} Much of the money from the grants went directly to opening the new Sandy Hook Elementary.\textsuperscript{600}

In 2013, the federal Department of Justice’s Office for Victims of Crime granted to the Connecticut Judicial Branch $1.5 million to reimburse organizations and agencies that provided direct support to victims, first responders, and the Newton community.\textsuperscript{601} The grant was distributed through the Antiterrorism and Emergency Assistance Program, which grants awards for crisis response, and is funded by the Crime Victims Fund for the Antiterrorism Emergency Reserve Fund.\textsuperscript{602} The federal DOJ also provided $2.5 million in funding for Connecticut and Newtown law enforcement agencies through the Bureau of Justice Assistance.\textsuperscript{603}

In 2014, the federal DOJ issued another grant for $7.1 million through its Office for Victims of Crime.\textsuperscript{604} This grant was for victim services, school safety efforts, and new mental health services.\textsuperscript{605} Additionally, the town of Newton and the state received $2.5 million from the federal DOJ for police overtime costs.\textsuperscript{506}
School Emergency Response to Violence Grants from the Department of Education totaled $6.4 million; $1.3 million was earmarked for mental-health providers working with student survivors.607 The remainder was used to hire teachers, security guards, and other personnel.608

Iranian Hostages
On November 4, 1979, roughly 3,000 Iranians stormed the U.S. embassy in Tehran and took 63 American men and women hostage, including diplomats.609 The seizure took place shortly after the Iranian Revolution.610 In early 1981, Algerian diplomats brokered an agreement, the Algiers Accords, and the hostages were released on January 20, 1981, minutes after the inauguration of Ronald Reagan as U.S. President.611 The Algiers Accords included, among other items, a provision preventing the freed hostages from seeking compensation from Iran in U.S. courts.612 As a result, former hostages and their families have never successfully won court judgments to collect damages for the harms of the hostage crisis.613

In November 2019, Congress enacted the United States Victims of State Sponsored Terrorism Fund Clarification Act, amending the original legislation by extending the life of the Fund and expanding eligibility to receive payments from the Fund—by including, for example, 9/11 victims who had won judgments against Iran.623 The Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2021 again amended the legislation.624

The Fund has distributed $3.3 billion since its creation.625 As of the latest report, $93.5 billion in compensatory and statutory damages remained unpaid for the former hostages, judgement holders, and 9/11 victims eligible for compensation from the fund.626 The Fund is scheduled to terminate in 2039, and the Special Master plans to authorize future payments if sufficient funds are available.627

State and Local Reparatory Efforts
Rosewood, Florida
The decimation of Rosewood started on January 1, 1923, when a white woman named Fannie Taylor reported an attack by an unidentified African American man in the town next to Rosewood.628 Many African American descendants of Rosewood contend that the “attack” was a cover-up for a visit from her white lover.629 Hearing the report from Taylor, a white vigilante mob led by Levy County Sheriff Robert Elias Walker descended upon Rosewood.630 The mob tortured and killed Sam Carter, an African American.631

In 2015, Congress passed the Justice for United States Victims of State Sponsored Terrorism Act, establishing a fund through the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2016 to compensate the American diplomats and staff who had been held hostage at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran for 444 days between 1979 and 1981.617 The Fund initially included an appropriation for $1.025 billion for Fiscal Year 2017.618 Further funding has been provided by proceeds of federal enforcement actions.619 At the time of passage, 37 former hostages were still alive.620 Each hostage is entitled to receive $10,000 per day of captivity, and spouses and children are each entitled to a lump sum of $600,000.621 Some of the appropriated money came from a $9 billion penalty assessed on Paris-based bank BNP Paribas, for violating sanctions against Iran, Sudan, and Cuba.622

For the next week, hundreds of white vigilantes, consisting of KKK members and other deputies from neighboring counties, arrived in Rosewood.632 They burned every home and building, including churches and schools, murdered six African American residents, and wounded dozens more.633 Two white men also died in a shootout.634 News of the “race war” traveled quickly throughout the state and country.635 but the Florida Governor never sent the National Guard to protect African American residents and end the violence.636 Many of Rosewood’s African American residents fled to the nearby swamps and hid during the riots.637 A rescue train evacuated fleeing residents to Gainesville. At the end of the violence, only the house of John and Mary Jane Hall Wright, the white residents of Rosewood, remained standing.

In February 1923, a grand jury convened in Bronson, Florida, to investigate the Rosewood massacre. Four days later, the grand jury found insufficient evidence to prosecute. African American residents never returned to Rosewood.

After weeks of sensation in the news following the violence in January 1923, the story of the Rosewood massacre disappeared from public media, as survivors largely never spoke of the event. In 1982, the St. Petersburg Times unraveled the history of Rosewood in a comprehensive article that later became a story on CBS’s 60 Minutes. Doctor was the driving force behind Rosewood becoming a public issue. He secured pro bono counsel to help descendants and victims seek compensation from the state for the violence and destruction of Rosewood.

In 1993, an academic report substantiated the claims of Rosewood descendants. Chaired by Dr. Maxine Jones of the Florida State University Department of History, the team issued A Documented History of the Incident Which Occurred at Rosewood, Florida, in January 1923.

Then in 1994 the Florida Legislature passed a claim bill to acknowledge and provide redress for the destruction and massacre of Rosewood. Florida’s restitution to victims included approximately $2.1 million in compensation and a state scholarship fund for direct descendants. The bill “recognized an equitable obligation to redress the injuries as a result of the destruction of Rosewood” and consisted of: (1) a finding of facts; (2) a direction to the Florida Department of Law Enforcement to conduct a criminal investigation in and around the destruction of Rosewood; (3) $500,000 to be distributed from the General Revenue Fund to African American families from Rosewood to compensate for demonstrated property loss; (4) compensation up to $150,000 from the General Revenue Fund for each of the nine living survivors; (5) the establishment of a state scholarship fund for direct descendants of Rosewood families; (6) a direction to the state university system to continue researching the destruction of Rosewood, the history of race relations in Florida, and to develop educational materials about the destruction of Rosewood.

The Rosewood Family Scholarship Program is codified in the state’s Education Code and the Florida Department of Education promulgated the criteria to receive an award. The Rosewood Family Scholarship provides student financial assistance to a maximum of 50 students annually and currently pays up to $6,100 per student per academic year. To be eligible, applicants must: be direct descendants who complete a Florida financial aid application; provide documentation of ancestry such as a birth certificate, marriage license, death certificate, church record, or obituary; and enroll in a state university, Florida College System institution, or career center authorized by law. Applicants are selected based on need.

In 2004, a Florida Historical Marker co-sponsored by the state and the Real Rosewood Foundation, a non-profit dedicated to preserving the history of Rosewood, was placed on State Road 24 to note where the community once was. It states: “Those who survived were forever scarred.”

North Carolina Sterilization

In 1919, North Carolina passed its first forced-sterilization law, which was amended in 1929 to allow the head of any penal or charitable institution that received some state support to “have the necessary operation for asexualization or sterilization performed upon any mentally defective or feeble-minded inmate or patient thereof.” The North Carolina Supreme Court invalidated the law in 1933 because it failed to provide any notice or opportunity for appeal. In response, the North Carolina Legislature created the North Carolina Eugenics Board, to implement the newly amended forced-sterilization law with very limited appeal rights.

The five members of the Board heard petitions brought by heads of state institutions, county superintendents of welfare, next of kin, or legal guardians arguing that individuals should be sterilized due to being epileptic, “feebleminded,” or mentally diseased. There was a very limited appeal process, but the board approved about 90 percent of the petitions.\textsuperscript{663} The state ultimately sterilized around 7,600 persons, the third-largest number in the country.\textsuperscript{664} The program was somewhat unique in that it also sterilized non-institutionalized individuals, not just those residing in penal or mental facilities.\textsuperscript{665} Moreover, the vast majority of sterilizations took place after World War II.\textsuperscript{666}

In 2002, Governor Mike Easley apologized for forced sterilizations performed under the purview of the State of North Carolina’s Eugenics Board.\textsuperscript{667} In 2010, Governor Bev Perdue established the North Carolina Justice for Sterilization Victims Foundation as part of the North Carolina Department of Administration, to function as a clearinghouse to help victims of the former state Eugenics Board.\textsuperscript{668} During 2011 and 2012, the Foundation also supported the separate Gubernatorial Task Force on Eugenics Compensation established under Executive Order 83.\textsuperscript{669} This effort culminated in the State Legislature creating the Eugenics Asexualization and Sterilization Compensation Program in 2013.\textsuperscript{670} North Carolina was the first state to pass legislation to compensate victims of state-sponsored eugenic sterilizations.\textsuperscript{671} The law set aside a $10 million pool for compensation payments, and 220 victims received $20,000 in 2014, $15,000 in 2015, and a final payment of around $10,000 in 2018.\textsuperscript{672}

The statute compensates individuals who were asexu- alized or sterilized involuntarily under the authority of the Eugenics Board of North Carolina under either the 1933 or 1937 version of the laws, and who were still alive at the time the statute was enacted.\textsuperscript{673} The limitation of compensation to those sterilized by the State Eugenics Board limited the state’s ability to remedy much of the involuntary sterilization that occurred in the state, as many individuals were ultimately sterilized at the county level without the involvement of the State Board.\textsuperscript{674}

Virginia (Eugenics)

In 1924, Virginia passed its Eugenical Sterilization Act, which authorized the sexual sterilization of inmates at state institutions.\textsuperscript{675} The Act authorized the superintendent of the Western, Eastern, Southwestern, or Central State Hospital or the State Colony for Epileptics and Feeble-Minded to impose sterilization upon any patient when he had the opinion that doing so was for the best interest of the patients and of society.\textsuperscript{676}

The Eugenical Sterilization Act was passed on the same day alongside the Racial Integrity Act, which banned inter-racial marriage by requiring marriage applicants to identify their race as “white,” “colored,” or “mixed,” with “white” being defined as a person “who has no trace whatsoever of any blood other than Caucasian.”\textsuperscript{677} Scholars have observed that the two acts, passed together, aimed to purify the white race.\textsuperscript{678} One inmate, Carrie Buck, appealed her order of sterilization, but the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the Virginia state law in \textit{Buck v. Bell} (1927) 274 U.S. 200.\textsuperscript{679} The controversial ruling was never overturned, but the law was repealed in 1974.\textsuperscript{680} Between 1927 and 1972, Virginia sterilized about 8,300 people.\textsuperscript{681}

In 2002, 75 years after \textit{Buck v. Bell}, Virginia Governor Mark R. Warner issued an apology for the state’s embrace of eugenics and denounced the state’s practice that involuntarily sterilized persons confined to state institutions from 1927 to 1979.\textsuperscript{682} In 2015, the Virginia Legislature voted to enact the Virginia Victims of Eugenics Sterilization Compensation Program (VESCP) and allocated $400,000 from the state general fund for compensation to individuals who were involuntarily sterilized pursuant to the Virginia Eugenical Sterilization Act and who were living as of February 1, 2015.\textsuperscript{683} As written in the budget, the funds were to be managed by the Department of Behavioral Health and Developmental Services and limited to $25,000 per claim\textsuperscript{684} instead of the proposed $50,000 per claim.\textsuperscript{685} Furthermore, should the funding provided for compensation be exhausted prior to the end of fiscal year 2016, the Department was directed to continue to collect applications.\textsuperscript{686} The Department was mandated to provide a report to the Governor and the Chairs of the House Appropriations and Senate Finance Committees on a quarterly basis on the number of additional individuals who applied.\textsuperscript{687} As of the enactment, there were only 11 surviving victims.\textsuperscript{688}

An individual or lawfully authorized representative is eligible to request compensation under this program if the individual was: (a) involuntarily sterilized pursuant to the 1924 Virginia Eugenical Sterilization Act; (b) living as of February 1, 2015; and (c) sterilized while a

California’s eugenic sterilization program began in 1909 and authorized medical superintendents in state homes and state hospitals to perform “asexualization” on patients. 689

California Sterilization Compensation Program

California’s eugenic sterilization program began in 1909 and authorized medical superintendents in state homes and state hospitals to perform “asexualization” on patients. 690 This allowed medical personnel to perform vasectomies on men and salpingectomies on women who were identified as “afflicted with mental disease which may have been inherited and is likely to be transmitted to descendants, the various grades of feeblemindedness, those suffering from perversion or marked departures from normal mentality or from disease of a syphilitic nature.” 691

California maintained 12 state homes and state hospitals that housed thousands of patients who were committed by the courts, family members, and medical authorities. 692 While many sterilizations included the use of consent forms, such consent was often a condition for release from commitment, and this along with other conditions prevented true consent. 693 Moreover, though the law did not target specific racial or ethnic groups, in practice, “labels of ‘mental deficiency’ and ‘feeblemindedness’ were applied disproportionately to racial and ethnic minorities, people with actual and perceived disabilities, poor people, and women.” 694

California’s eugenic sterilization law was repealed in 1979, but sterilization without proper consent continued in state institutions. 695 In 2003, the State of California formally apologized for California’s eugenic sterilization program up to 1979, including apologies from Governor Gray Davis, Attorney General Bill Lockyer, and a resolution passed by the State Senate expressing profound regret for the program. 696

In 2014, the California State Auditor released an audit of female inmate sterilizations that occurred in the state prison system’s medical facilities between fiscal years 2005-2006 and 2012-2013. 697 The auditor discovered 144 women imprisoned by the state were sterilized through bilateral tubal ligation, which was medically unnecessary and used solely for female sterilization. 698 Following this report, the Legislature prohibited the sterilization for the purpose of birth control of any individual under the custody of the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation. 699 There are an estimated 244 survivors of illegal prison sterilization. 700

The California Legislature passed, and Governor Gavin Newsom signed, Assembly Bill No. 137 in the 2021-2022 legislative session, apologizing for sterilizations at state prisons, ordering the creation of memorial plaques, and allocating $4.5 million for compensation to those sterilized by the state. 701 AB 137 created the California Forced or Involuntary Sterilization Compensation Program (Program), which financially compensates survivors of state-sponsored sterilization. 702 The California Victim Compensation Board administers the Program. 703

Each approved applicant receives an initial payment of $15,000 within 60 days of notice of confirmed eligibility. 704 After all applications are processed and all initial payments are made, any remaining program funds will be disbursed evenly to the qualified recipients by March 31, 2024. 705

Chicago Police Department

Jon Burge was a high ranking Chicago Police Department officer who, from 1972 to 1991, led a group of detectives and officers who tortured and abused over 120 African Americans, causing many victims to issue coerced confessions. 706 Burge led operations of cruelty that included physical and psychological abuse such as “trickery, deception, threats, intimidation, physical beatings, sexual humiliation, mock execution, and electroshock torture.” 707 Moreover, evidence suggests judges and some city officials were complicit in these abuses for many years. 708 As a result, many African American victims were convicted of crimes due to coerced confessions, and some were sentenced to the death penalty. 709 There was an effort to hold Burge specifically accountable for his actions, but the statute of limitations had expired on many of the cases of torture. 710 Community members started to seek alternative methods of repair, which eventually led to a reparations ordinance. 711

Community activists in Chicago, including those in the Chicago Torture Justice Memorial and attorney Joey Mogul of People’s Law Office, sought compensation for years. 712 Activists petitioned the Inter-American Commission for...
Human Rights (IACHR) and the United Nations Committee Against Torture (UNCAT).\textsuperscript{713} Although the IACHR did not take official action, the UNCAT issued a report affirming the advocates’ position and urged the United States to provide redress to the survivors of torture, “by supporting the passage of the Ordinance entitled Reparations for the Chicago Police Torture Survivors.”\textsuperscript{714} The UNCAT also noted that, although Burge was later convicted for perjury and obstruction of justice, investigations did not gather sufficient evidence for a constitutional rights violation prosecution, so no police officer has been convicted for their crimes and the majority of victims still did not receive “compensation for the extensive injuries suffered.”\textsuperscript{715}

In 2015, the Chicago City Council “approved a municipal ordinance giving reparations to Burge torture survivors,” and the $5.5 million package awarded claimants $100,000 in financial payments.\textsuperscript{16} In addition, the ordinance included a formal apology; the creation of a commission to administer financial reparations; free tuition at the City Colleges of Chicago and free access to job training and placement programs for survivors; psychological counseling and healthcare for survivors; priority access to other support services for survivors; the inclusion of the Burge case in U.S. history curriculum for eighth and tenth grade students; and a memorial site.\textsuperscript{717}

As of 2021, the only portion of the ordinance remaining unfulfilled is the memorial.\textsuperscript{719} While the memorial has still not been built, individuals at the Chicago Torture Justice Memorial continue meeting with the Mayor and remain hopeful the process will start soon, though the city’s ordinance and resolution did not specify a timeline or specific funding for the memorial.\textsuperscript{720}

Evanston, Illinois

The City of Evanston passed the Restorative Housing Program in March 2021 to redress the city’s discriminatory practices in housing, zoning, and lending that created a wealth and opportunity gap between white and African American Evanstonians.\textsuperscript{721} Before enacting the program, the City Council’s Reparations Subcommittee had commissioned a report, entitled, Evanston Policies and Practices Directly Affecting the African American Community, 1900-1960 (and Present).\textsuperscript{722} According to the report, “the City of Evanston officially supported and enabled the practice of segregation,”\textsuperscript{723} with specific actions such as: passing a zoning ordinance in 1921 that implicitly condoned race-based housing segregation; the demolition of homes owned by African American families for economic development, on the grounds that they were “unsanitary” or “overcrowded”; providing permits to Northwestern University to develop temporary, segregated housing for veterans after World War II; segregating other post-World War II temporary housing for veterans; and failing until the late 1960s to enact a fair housing ordinance to outlaw housing discrimination.\textsuperscript{724}

Under the city’s Restorative Housing Program, African American Evanstonians, their descendants, or other residents who experienced housing discrimination by the City of Evanston are provided $25,000 to either purchase a home, conduct home improvements, or pay down their existing mortgage.\textsuperscript{725} The Restorative Housing Program was the first such repair program enacted by the city, but Evanston has also studied its discriminatory past, created an Equity and Empowerment Commission, created a City Reparations Fund, honored local historical African American sites, and issued an apology.\textsuperscript{726}

The Restorative Housing Program aimed to increase African American homeownership in order to revitalize and preserve African American owner-occupied homes in Evanston.\textsuperscript{727} To be eligible, the home must be located in Evanston and be the applicant’s primary residence.\textsuperscript{728} The program will eventually extend funds to all intended recipients: Evanston residents of African American ancestry who are at least 18 years old, and, in order of priority, either: (1) an Ancestor, a resident who lived in Evanston between 1919 and 1969, was at least 18 years old at the time, and experienced housing discrimination due to the city’s policies or practices; (2) a Direct Descendant of an Ancestor (e.g., child, grandchild, great-grandchild); or (3) a resident who does not qualify as an Ancestor or Direct Descendant, but experienced housing discrimination due to a city ordinance, policy or practice after 1969.729

At the close of the first round of applications, 122 Ancestor-applicants were verified by the city, and 16 were randomly selected in January 2022 via the city’s lottery to receive the first round of payments.730 In March 2023, Evanston voted to expand the form of compensation to include direct cash payments731 and announced plans to disburse 35 to 80 additional grants.732

In November 2022, the City Council passed a resolution to dedicate up to $1 million annually to the City Reparations Fund, for a period of 10 years, taken from the graduated real estate transfer tax collected from all property purchased above a price of $1.5 million.733 More funding came in December 2022 when the City Council passed Resolution 125-R-22 to transfer $2 million from the City’s General Fund to the Reparations Fund.734 Evanston Mayor Daniel Biss launched a survey to assess Evanston residents’ views on the reparations program on February 16, 2023.735

Asheville, North Carolina
In June 2021, the City Council of Asheville, North Carolina voted to allocate $2.1 million of the city’s proceeds from the sale of city-owned land to support a Reparations Commission.736 A portion of this land had been purchased by the city in the 1970s through urban renewal, a policy that “resulted in the displacement of vibrant Black communities and the removal of Black residents and homeowners, many into substandard public housing.”737 The city anticipates that of the $2.1 million, $200,000 will fund the Reparation Commission’s planning and engagement process, leaving approximately $1.9 million in initial funding for compensation.738 The city’s Reparations Commission is working on a report that is scheduled to be completed by October 31, 2023.739

The Commission is required to consider ways to make amends for the city’s participation in and sanctioning of the enslavement of African Americans, its enforcement of segregation and accompanying discriminatory practices, its implementation of an urban renewal program that destroyed multiple successful African American communities, and many other actions it took inflicting harms upon African Americans living in Asheville.740 The Commission is charged with making short-, medium-, and long-term recommendations to “make significant progress toward repairing the damage caused by public and private systemic racism,” so that the City of Asheville and local community groups may incorporate these recommendations into their short- and long-term priorities and plans.741 The resolution states that the “report and the resulting budgetary and programmatic priorities may include but not be limited to increasing minority homeownership and access to other affordable housing, increasing minority business ownership and career opportunities, strategies to grow equity and generational wealth, closing the gaps in health care, education, employment and pay, neighborhood safety and fairness within criminal justice.”742

Providence, Rhode Island
After the murder of George Floyd by Minneapolis police in May 2020, the mayor of Providence, Rhode Island signed an executive order to launch a truth-telling, reconciliation, and restitution process to “eradicate[e] bias and racism” against its African American and Indigenous residents and other people of color.743 Following that three-part process, the city issued a formal apology and enacted a 2023 city budget that includes $10 million earmarked for programs recommended by the city’s Municipal Reparations Commission, but does not include direct cash payments to descendants.744

Beginning with a truth-telling phase, the Rhode Island Black Heritage Society collaborated with city and state historical institutions to publish a 200-page report, A Matter of Truth: The Struggle for African Heritage and Indigenous People Equal Rights in Providence, Rhode Island (1620-2020).745 The report documents the history of harm that Providence sought to remedy, including the lasting wounds caused by slavery, the genocide of Indigenous people, and the ongoing racial discrimination from 1620 to 2020 throughout the City of Providence and the State of Rhode Island.746

In the reconciliation phase, the Providence Cultural Equity Initiative and Roger Williams University published a report detailing their efforts to survey Providence community members, develop guiding principles for reparations, and develop a model and proof of concept to continue reconciliation in perpetuity, including through a multimedia initiative. For its guiding principles on reconciliation, the Reconciliation Report noted the need for ongoing, communal learning, a focus on particular people and places, and the importance of efforts to cross barriers of identity and empathy. The city’s reconciliation principles also rejected depictions of participants that reduced them to racialized categories or tropes, while celebrating resilience both past and present. Finally, Providence’s reconciliation principles underscored action, emphasizing a community-owned but institutionally-supported process, and the principle that reconciliation cannot be accomplished without reparations.

With regard to the third and final phase—reparations—the mayor’s 2022 executive order created the Municipal Reparations Commission (Commission), consisting of 13 members from the local community. The Commission held over a dozen public meetings, discussing the justifications for reparations and the form they might take. In November 2022, Jorge Elorza, the Mayor of Providence, signed a city budget allocating $10 million—provided to the city from the American Rescue Plan Act—to fund programs across seven of the Commission’s recommendations. The Mayor also issued an executive order recognizing and apologizing for the city’s role in discriminating against African Heritage and Indigenous people.

PART III: RECOMMENDATION FOR A FORMAL APOLOGY

XVI. Recommendation for a California Apology

The Legislature directed the Task Force to recommend appropriate remedies in consideration of the Task Force’s findings. In those recommendations, the Legislature required the Task Force to address, among other issues, how the State of California will offer a formal apology on behalf of the people of California for the perpetration of gross human rights violations and crimes against humanity on African slaves and their descendants.

Reparative apologies situate the harms of the past in society’s present injustices, pay tribute to victims, and encourage communal reflection to ensure the historic wrongs are never forgotten and never repeated. In 2005, the United Nations adopted General Assembly Resolution 60/147 setting forth the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law. The Basic Principles and Guidelines include the principle of satisfaction. “Satisfaction” can include, among other things, a public apology that constitutes an “acknowledgement of the facts and acceptance of responsibility,” judicial and administrative sanctions against perpetrators, and commemorations and tributes to the victims.

Apologies alone are inadequate reparations to victims. But when combined with material forms of reparations, apologies provide an opportunity for communal reckoning with the past and repair for moral, physical, and dignitary harms. An effective apology should both acknowledge and express regret for what was done to victims and their relatives and take responsibility. Subtle differences in phrasing can denote unequivocal acceptance of responsibility for providing redress to victims and for making the changes necessary to guarantee non-repetition. An apology should also be accompanied by a request for forgiveness.

A universally satisfactory apology does not exist because each victim group has unique needs. However, in 2012, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights determined that the following elements form a “good” apology: (1) it must be made publicly; (2) it must be made at the place where the events occurred; (3) it must acknowledge responsibility for the violations that have been committed; (4) it must be made in the presence and with the participation of a considerable number of survivors and next of kin; (5) it must involve the highest state authority and senior state officials; and (6) it must be broadcast and disseminated fully throughout the state.
The Task Force recommends the Legislature build upon the structure of previous state apologies and conform to international standards for the principle of satisfaction. The Legislature must apologize on behalf of the State of California and the People of California for the State’s perpetration of gross human rights violations against Africans who were enslaved and their Descendants; and the State must do so through public apology, requests for forgiveness, censure of state perpetrators, and tributes to victims.

The Task Force recommends that the Legislature formally apologize on its own behalf, and on behalf of the State of California, for all of the harms delineated in Part I of this report, and for the atrocities committed by California state actors who promoted, enforced, and facilitated the institution of chattel slavery and its ongoing legacy of systemic discrimination. The Task Force has found that California, its executive branch, courts, and Legislature denied African Americans their fundamental liberties and denied their humanity throughout the state’s history, from before the Civil War to the present. By participating in these horrors, California further perpetuated the harms African Americans faced, imbuing racial prejudice throughout society through segregation, public and private discrimination, and unequal disbursement of state and federal funding. The apology should also include a censure of the gravest barbarities carried out on behalf of the state by—or with the knowledge or support of—its representative officers, governing bodies, and people, as documented in this report.

In addition to acknowledging the atrocities committed by the state or which the state failed to deter or punish, the apology should also acknowledge California’s responsibility to repair the harms and guarantee non-repetition.

To be effective, a considerable number of survivors and their relatives should participate in the development of the apology. The Task Force recommends that the Legislature accomplish this by establishing a program or government body, such as the California American Freedman Affairs Agency, to facilitate listening sessions that allow victims and their relatives to narrate personal experiences and recount specific injustices caused by the State of California and elected and appointed officials at the state and local levels. The listening sessions should inform the language of the Legislature’s apology and the methods enacted by the Legislature to satisfy victims.

Finally, the Legislature should order the commission of plaques or other commemorative tributes to secure communities’ memory of the victims and the injustices, as occurred in California’s apology for forced sterilizations. Physical markers of past atrocities serve as reminders of the terror and harm and ensure the collective memory does not gloss over the past. Created in collaboration with stakeholders, plaques and memorials can honor survivors and raise awareness of descendants’ ongoing struggle for justice.

Importantly, however, the Task Force reminds the Legislature that an apology on its own, no matter how forceful or detailed, is not enough; to have any effect under existing standards for reparations and reconciliation, the apology must take place within the same legislative effort that results in compensation and the enactment of policy recommendations to ensure non-repetition of the significant atrocities that would be addressed by the apology.

PART IV: METHODOLOGIES FOR CALCULATING COMPENSATION AND RESTITUTION

XVII. Calculations of Reparations and Forms of Compensation and Restitution

In enacting AB 3121, the Legislature charged the Task Force with recommending appropriate remedies in consideration of the Task Force’s findings, including: (1) how any form of compensation to African Americans, with a special consideration for African Americans who are descendants of persons enslaved in the United States, is calculated; (2) what form of compensation should be awarded, through what instrumentalities, and who should be eligible for such compensation; and (3) how, in consideration of the Task Force’s findings, any other forms of rehabilitation or restitution to African descendants are warranted and what form and scope those measures should take.

In preparing the recommendations in Chapter 17 of this report, the Task Force consulted with a team of preeminent economists and policy experts, including Dr. Kaycea Campbell, Dr. William Spriggs, Dr. William A. Darity Jr., Dr. Thomas Craemer, and A. Kirsten Mullen. The Task Force also relied upon its own expertise, the public comments via in-person hearings, telephone or other remote access and email, and the testimony of dozens of witnesses who appeared before the Task Force.

In developing the recommendations regarding methodologies for calculating reparations, the Task Force considered, among numerous other factors, harms to African Americans (especially descendants of persons enslaved in the United States) attributable to the State of California and its local jurisdictions, and the availability of data. In many instances of atrocities, California has not collected data that would allow for precise calculations, and for those areas, the Task Force recommends, as AB 3121 directs, how the Legislature should calculate reparations in drafting and implementing a future state-level reparations scheme.

The Task Force voted to recommend that only those individuals who are able to demonstrate that they are the descendant of either an enslaved African American in the United States, or a free African American living in the United States prior to 1900, be eligible for monetary reparations. The Task Force also determined that the State of California, potentially through the recommended new California American Freedman’s Affairs Agency, should take responsibility for assisting any requester in establishing whether they qualify, by funding or otherwise handling the tracing and confirmation of this lineage through whatever means necessary. While the data available to the Task Force and its experts did not separate out descendant status from other racial or ethnic data, the Task Force generally recommends that the Legislature begin to collect data regarding descendant status and, when calculating reparations as recommended by the Task Force, take this data into account in formulating the most accurate amount of needed reparations as possible.

The Task Force also offers specific, preliminary estimates for the Legislature’s consideration, regarding losses to African Americans in California, due to (a) health disparities, (b) disproportionate African American mass incarceration and over-policing, (c) housing discrimination, and (d) devaluation of African American businesses. Further, with regard to two other atrocities, unjust property takings by eminent domain and labor discrimination, the Task Force recommends a method of calculation for such reparations.

Although compensation and restitution for particular injuries is a necessary step toward comporting with international standards for reparations, it is not enough. Compensation or restitution for particular injuries, alone, would not provide a sufficient remedy for the many other longstanding laws and policies, and the scope of harm caused by them, detailed in Chapters I through 13 of this report against the whole class of people impacted by those atrocities. For these harms established by the detailed factual record recounted in Chapters I through 13, cumulative monetary payments must be made.

Health Harms

The difference in life expectancy between African Americans and white non-Hispanics in California can be interpreted as the cumulative effect of unequal treatment, from unequal access to health insurance and health care based on occupational discrimination, to discriminatory local zoning that exposes African American neighborhoods to greater environmental harm.

The difference in life expectancy between African Americans and white non-Hispanics in California can be interpreted as the cumulative effect of unequal treatment, from unequal access to health insurance and health care based on occupational discrimination, to discriminatory local zoning that exposes African American neighborhoods to greater environmental harm. Whether the task force recommends a method of calculation for such reparations.

1. Take the value of the individual’s statistical life (roughly $10,000,000) and divide it by the white non-Hispanic life expectancy in California (78.6 years in 2021), to obtain the value for each year of life absent anti-Black racial discrimination ($127,226).
2. Then calculate the difference in average life expectancy in years between African American and white non-Hispanic Californians (7.6 years in 2021).

3. Then multiply the two to arrive at a total loss in value of life for each African American due to health disparities based on racial discrimination ($966,918). An African American Californian at the average life expectancy of 71 years of age who spent their entire life in California would be entitled to the full amount.

4. For eligible recipients who spent part of their life in California, an annual value can be obtained by dividing the full amount by the African American life expectancy: $966,918 / 71 = $13,619. This would be the value of each year spent in California, to which an African American Californian would be entitled, subject to their eligibility.

Mass Incarceration and Over-Policing of African Americans

The “War on Drugs” began in 1971.770 Established research shows that although people of all races use and sell illegal drugs at remarkably similar rates,771 the federal and state governments disproportionately target African Americans for drug-related arrests.772 To measure racial mass incarceration disparities in the 49 years of the War on Drugs from 1971 to 2020, the Task Force’s experts estimated the disproportionate years spent behind bars for African American compared to white non-Hispanic drug offenders, and multiplied them with what a California state employee would have earned in a year on average (since incarcerated persons were forced, unpaid “employees” of the state). The Task Force’s experts then added compensation for loss of freedom, comparable to Japanese American World War II prisoners, and arrive at $159,792 per year of disproportionate incarceration in 2020 dollars.

To estimate the number of disproportionately incarcerated African American individuals:

1. The Task Force’s experts used total California arrest figures for felony drug offenses and African American drug felony arrests from 1971 to 2020, to compute the African American percentage.

2. The Task Force’s experts then computed the difference between the percentage of African American drug felony arrests and the estimated African American population percentage for each year. The difference between the two provides an estimate of the percentage of excess African American drug felony drug arrests.

3. The Task Force’s experts obtained the number of African American excess felony drug arrests by multiplying the percentage of excess African American drug felony drug arrests times the total number of felony drug arrests.

4. The Task Force’s experts then multiplied African American excess felony drug arrests by the average drug possession-related prison term of 1.48 years and the annual reparations amount of $20,000, and add the annual amounts up over the entire time period from 1971 to 2020, to arrive at a total sum of $227,858,891,023 in 2020 dollars.

5. Disproportionate law enforcement reduced the quality of life for all African American Californian descendants who lived in California during the “War on Drugs.” The Task Force’s experts therefore divided the total sum by the estimated 1,976,911 African American California residents who lived in the state in 2020, for an amount per recipient of $115,260 in 2020 dollars, or $2,352 for each year of residency in California from 1971 to 2020. The Task Force also recommends that African American California residents who served time for the possession or distribution of substances now legal (e.g., cannabis) should additionally be entitled to sue for compensation for their time in prison, or that the State of California create a special compensation fund to allow for specific redress of that specific harm.

Housing Discrimination

Nefarious housing discrimination has always existed in the United States, including in California even before the state’s founding in 1850.773 Individual participants in the housing market discriminated against African American buyers and renters, local zoning rules enforced segregation, and the state allowed this discrimination to occur even though the Supreme Court ruled it unconstitutional.
The Task Force presents two potential methods to calculate the losses due to housing discrimination. The first calculates all monetary losses due to racial housing discrimination by calculating the average per capita white to African American homeownership wealth gap in 2019, and compounding interest on that gap until 2022.

The second method calculates monetary losses specifically due to redlining. As discussed in Chapter 5, Housing Segregation, redlining is a clear case of state-sanctioned housing discrimination beginning with the New Deal in 1933, and lasting for 44 years until the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977 formally (although not effectively) sought to combat the persisting effects of redlining. While redlining denied federally insured, affordable mortgages to those in African American neighborhoods based on federal law, California could have insured redlined homes in place of the federal government to address this injustice in a timely fashion. But not only did California not engage in any policies to ameliorate the effect of federal redlining, it embraced redlining policies and other policies discriminating against African Americans Californians.

Method 1: Estimating Financial Losses Due to All Forms of Housing Discrimination until the Present
In 2019, one year before the Legislature enacted AB 3121, and one year before the COVID-19 crisis hit, the average African American non-Hispanic home in California had a value of $593,200, and the average white non-Hispanic home had a value of $773,400. At the time, about 36.8 percent of African American Californian households owned their own home, while 63.2 percent of white Californian households did, reflecting a homeownership gap of 26.4 percentage points. Using 2019 census figures for the average number of people living in African American and white California households, the experts estimated the total wealth in home values controlled collectively by African American and white Californians.

\frac{14,364,928}{2.36} = 6,086,834

The experts then estimated the total wealth in homes controlled in 2019 collectively by all African American non-Hispanic Californian households, and the total wealth in homes controlled in 2019 collectively by all white Californian households.

\frac{($593,200 \cdot 907,371)\cdot 0.368}{2,213,986} = $198,076,911,610

After calculating the total housing wealth controlled by each of the two racial groups, the experts computed the estimated per-capita amount held by each group—including those who do not own houses, due to housing discrimination.

\]

\frac{2,975,176,286,659}{14,364,928} = $207,114
Executive Summary

Comparing the two shows an estimated per capita home ownership wealth gap of $117,648 in 2019. Adding a compounded, annual 30-year mortgage interest rate (3.10 percent in 2020), the African American and white homeownership gap in California, in 2020, is approximately $121,295 in 2020 dollars.

While this figure represents the cumulative effect of all sources of discrimination, including individuals (home owners, real estate agents), corporate banks, local zoning boards, as well as state and federal actors (e.g. through policies like redlining), it represents a cautious estimate because it assumes that reparations for de jure discrimination (i.e., redlining) should not have been paid earlier (i.e., after 1977 when the federal government passed a law attempting to counteract the persisting effects of redlining).

Method 2: Estimating Financial Losses Due Primarily to Redlining

Alternatively, the Legislature could estimate the financial losses due to housing discrimination by calculating losses due primarily to redlining. This process follows a similar method to the one used above but uses data instead from 1930 (three years before the start of federal redlining in 1933) and 1980 (three years after the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977 formally sought to end private lending practices that reproduced redlining). While the Task Force would ideally use data from 1933 and 1977 to perform this calculation, at the time of this report, relevant data from those years is unavailable, and the Task Force relies instead on data from the nearest decennial censuses (1930 and 1980).

In 1930, Black homes in California had a mean value of $4,535, and white homes in California had a mean value of $6,067, reflecting a $1,532 difference. At the time, in California, about 37.6 percent of African Americans owned their own home, versus 48.2 percent of white Americans, revealing a homeownership gap of 10.6 percent. From this data, the Task Force’s experts estimated the total wealth held in home values collectively by African Americans and white Californians.

The Task Force’s expert team estimated the total wealth in homes held in each year. For 1930:

\frac{(4,535 \times 22,595)}{81,048} = 117,648

\frac{(6,067 \times 1,482,203)}{5,408,260} = 207,114

Calculating the total wealth held by each of the two racial groups, they then computed the estimated wealth per-capita (i.e. per person) in each group (whether homeowner or not).

Taking the difference between the two ($801 - $475) results in an estimated per capita African American-white home value wealth gap of $326 (in 1930 dollars), favoring white Californians. This gap represents the unequal starting positions for African American and white Californians even before the federal government massively subsidized white homeownership (while excluding African American applicants) through the New Deal and GI Bill.

The experts then repeated the calculation with data from 1980, three years after the federal government attempted to end the effects of redlining through the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977. Because the 1980 census did not provide the total number of white or African American households in California, the experts estimated this figure by dividing the total number of white and African American Californians by the mean or average number of white Americans and African Americans per household that year:

In 1980, the average African American non-Hispanic California home was worth $66,670, and the average white non-Hispanic California home an estimated $100,516 in 1980 dollars. To identify how much of the 1980 per-capita homeownership wealth gap was due to California’s complicity in federal redlining discrimination, the 1930 per-capita homeownership wealth gap can be subtracted from the 1980 value. After adjusting the 1930 per-capita homeownership wealth gap into its equivalent purchasing power in 1980 dollars, subtracting the 1930 per-capita homeownership wealth gap from the 1980 per-capita homeownership wealth gap ($11,573 - $1,483) results in a redlining per-capita wealth gap of $10,090, quantifying how much Black Californians lost in homeownership wealth due to federal redlining discrimination and California’s complicity in this policy. Compounding $10,090 up to 2020 using the annual 30-year mortgage interest rates yields a per-capita value of $161,508 in 2020 dollars. In other words, the Task Force’s expert team calculated that discriminatory redlining facilitated by the State of California caused the average African American in California to lose $161,508 in homeownership wealth.

To estimate a hypothetical amount California might have to pay to make up only for redlining, the expert team multiplied the average loss to African American Californians due to redlining with the number of African Americans living in the State in 1980. While the Task Force recommends reparations payments to descendants, specifically, because the U.S. Census does not currently identify the number of such descendants in the State, this report uses the number of census respondents who identified as Black or African American alone as a rough estimate. Multiplying the average-per capita housing wealth gap in 2080 dollars ($161,508) with the number of African American residents in California in 1980 (1,819,281) yields $293,828,435,748—or approximately $294 billion (in 2020 dollars). If all 1,976,911 African American non-Hispanic California residents who lived in the State in 2020 were eligible African American descendants of the enslaved in the United States, each would receive housing reparations up to $148,630—or $3,378 for each year between 1933 and 1977 spent as a resident of the State of California.

Divided by the entire African American population in California in 1980, and the entire white population in California in 1980, respectively, each of these estimates yields the per-capita wealth in homes held by each group. The estimated average per capita African American wealth in California homes in 1980 amounted to $7,375, and the estimated per capita white homeownership wealth in California homes amounted to $18,948. In short, white Californians’ per capita home wealth was $11,573 (in 1980 dollars) greater than that of African American Californians.
five percent. In 2018 alone, 75,000 Black Americans left the state. The State’s more expensive coastal cities alone have shed 275,000 Black residents.

Due to the voluminous records associated with the State’s many eminent domain actions throughout history, the Task Force and its experts did not have sufficient capacity, within the lifespan of the Task Force, to provide a calculation of the harm caused by unjust property takings throughout the State. Nevertheless, the Task Force’s economic expert team explored two potential methods to quantify the damage caused by these actions, examining the displacement of African Americans Californians by the state and its local governments through eminent domain.

One method the Legislature could undertake would be to calculate the loss in property value experienced by displaced African Americans or descendants. This could be done by examining the market value of the seized property at the time it was taken, subtracting the amount paid to the owner after eminent domain, and adding the increase in the property’s net value by adding in a fair measure of the estimated appreciation to the present day. A second method of estimating loss could measure the compensation due by using the current value of the property seized from African Americans or descendants. These methods for calculating harm are complicated if the property value has declined in value since it was seized, or if the seized property is now being used for infrastructure whose value is difficult to quantify. But, based on its experts’ recommendations, the Task Force suggests some strategies to assist the Legislature in overcoming that hurdle.

Devaluation of African American Businesses

As detailed in Chapters 10 and 13, discriminatory policies resulted in the decimation and devaluation of African American businesses. Business formation results from a combination of factors creating demand for businesses—including the public sector, household, business-to-business transactions, and the entrepreneurial environment—as well as existing rules, regulations, and taxes. But, as documented in Chapters 10 and 13, the doors to entrepreneurial opportunity are much more closed to the state’s African American residents than its white ones due to discrimination and its effects, including sharp differences in access to capital and equity.

The doors to entrepreneurial opportunity are much more closed to the state’s African American residents than its white ones due to discrimination and its effects, including sharp differences in access to capital and equity.

The State of California does not collect information on business establishments by race, and does not maintain a database of contractors at the state or local level by race. Instead, the Task Force’s experts reviewed the U.S. Census Bureau’s Survey of Business Owners, which provides information about businesses, including information distinguished by race. The most recent data from the Census’s survey of business owners is from 2012. Though the Census only gives a snapshot of differences in business ownership in 2012, it displays the total wealth acquired by African American versus white businesses in California, reflecting the cumulative effects of racial inequalities resulting from actions by the State of California. As a result, it provides a guide for measuring the losses to business wealth caused by discrimination.

In 2012, the U.S. Census Bureau reported that there were 1,875,847 white non-Hispanic owned firms in California,
Executive Summary

Census data show that African American-owned businesses are not overrepresented in the type of ethnic enclave industries of accommodations and food services, or retail sales catering towards an African American market. So, if there were no discriminatory restrictions on access to capital or business equity—that is, if African American and white entrepreneurs compete on an equal playing field—the industry of African American and white businesses would be far more similar, reflecting the business opportunities that exist in California. For instance, the discrimination documented in this report explains why African American businesses lag behind white ones in the construction industry, a capital-intensive industry where access to government contracts matters greatly. The history and ongoing effects of residential segregation and redlining further limited opportunities for African American construction firms in the private sector, highlighting again how discrimination has produced the African American and white business wealth gap in construction, a trend that reoccurs across nearly every other industry.

The Task Force recommends estimating the effect of discrimination against African American businesses by implementing an equation that calculates a figure for each state separately, based on the general demand environment of state and local government contracting and household income. Controlling for each state allows us to then control for differences in each state’s business environment. Then estimates can incorporate the number of businesses formed, and sales and receipts generated on those factors. This is an approach used by many sociologists researching differences in business formation using the business environment. Using this method, the Task Force’s experts estimate that African Americans in California were able to create 59,951 fewer firms than African Americans in other states, on average, under the same circumstances, reflecting the disadvantages unique to California. The average sales of firms in California, according to the 2012 U.S. Census Survey, was $1,103,966. Because the average value of a non-financial business is generally 2.3 times its sales value that would give these firms an average value of approximately $2,539,122. Multiplying that value times the missing number of businesses yields $152,222,903,022 in missing African American business wealth in California. On a per capita basis, using the African American population as of 2020, that would amount to roughly $77,000 per African American in California.

Conclusion

Since this list of harms and atrocities is not exhaustive, the total of the estimated losses to African American Californians is not a final estimate of losses, nor, given the Task Force’s determination of eligibility for compensation, is it a recommendation of an amount of reparations payments. Rather, it is an economically conservative initial assessment of what losses, at a minimum, the State of California caused or could have prevented, but did not. Further data collection and research would be required to augment these initial loss-estimates. And the Legislature would then have to decide how to translate loss-estimates into proposed reparations amounts and make determinations of who would ultimately be eligible to receive those amounts.
The Task Force also recommends that the Legislature provide reparations for less quantifiable harms. For example, pain and suffering from generations of discrimination represents real harm experienced by descendants.

Also, because in some instances, more data and research are required to calculate the just amount of reparations, the Task Force recommends that the Legislature make a substantial initial down payment on reparations, to be augmented over time with additional payments as new evidence becomes available. It should be communicated to the public that the substantial initial down payment is the beginning of a conversation about redressing the economic and societal harm of historical injustices, not the end of it. Delay of reparations is in itself an injustice that causes more suffering and may ultimately deny justice, especially to the elderly among the harmed. For this reason, the Task Force recommends prioritizing elderly recipients in the monetary reparations program.

PART V: POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS

The Legislature directed the Task Force to recommend appropriate remedies in consideration of the Task Force’s findings; to address how California laws and policies that continue to disproportionately and negatively affect African Americans as a group and perpetuate the lingering material and psychosocial effects of slavery can be eliminated; to address how the resulting injuries can be reversed; to provide appropriate policies, programs, projects, and recommendations for the purpose of reversing the injuries; and to identify any other “forms of rehabilitation or restitution to African descendants” necessary. AB 3121 thus requires that the Task Force provide concrete, common-sense, and necessary recommendations to end, once and for all, the discriminatory harm and suffering that those descended from enslaved Africans have uniquely endured and continue to experience in every facet of life.

In response to the Legislature’s direction, Part V of the report contains policy recommendations tailored to the harms discussed in Chapters 1 through 13, with “[s]pecial [c]onsideration for African Americans [w]ho are [d]escendants of [p]ersons [e]nslaved in the United States.” In the Task Force’s view, adoption and implementation of these recommendations is crucial to effectuating AB 3121’s purpose and beginning the long-overdue process of providing true reparations to African Americans in California. As the Legislature recognized in AB 3121, and as Part I of this report documented, emancipation from enslavement did not end the badges and incidents of slavery. By all measures, from health to wealth, African Americans as a group, and especially descendants of those enslaved, live with the persistent consequences of this legacy—consequences that include a shorter life expectancy, a vast wealth gap borne of stolen labor, political disenfranchisement, mass incarceration, the destruction of African American families, inadequate and biased health care, limited education and employment opportunities, unjust takings of property, redlining, and the destruction of African American-owned businesses and cultural institutions. Descendants of those who were enslaved have uniquely carried the weight of the harms and atrocities visited upon their ancestors, as trauma and loss have passed from generation to generation.

As described in Chapters 1 through 13, the harms inflicted upon African Americans have not been incidental or accidental—they have been by design. They are the result of an all-encompassing web of discriminatory laws, regulations, and policies enacted by government. These laws and policies have enabled government officials and private individuals and entities to perpetuate the legacy of slavery by subjecting African Americans as a group to discrimination, exclusion, neglect, and violence in every facet of American life. And there has been no comprehensive effort to disrupt and dismantle institutionalized racism, stop the harm, and redress the specific injuries caused to descendants and the larger African American community. This is not to say that laws and society have not changed at all. But as Malcolm X expressed, “If you stick a knife in my back nine inches and pull it out six inches, there’s no progress. If you pull it all the way out, that’s not progress. Progress is healing the wound that the blow made.”

AB 3121 invokes the international standards of remedy for wrongs and injuries caused by the state. In developing its policy recommendations in Part V, the Task Force followed the standards embodied in the U.N. Principles on Reparations. These recommended changes or substantially similar measures must be implemented in some form in order for any California reparatory effort to be able to satisfy the international reparations framework’s requirements that there be both “rehabilitation” and “guarantees of non-repetition.” Further, a number of the policies are also intended to restore to augment the Task Force’s recommendations for restitution and compensation in Part IV, Chapter 17, Economic Calculations. Policies necessary to achieve rehabilitation, while also affording special consideration to Descendants, should have the scope needed to bring repair to all those who have endured the harms outlined in this report and to ensure that the guarantee of non-repetition for those harms is fully realized.

The enormity of the task before California and the nation cannot be overstated. The policies recommended in this report, while wide-ranging, are not exhaustive—they are only a start. The harms to be repaired have been more than 400 years in the making. Their undoing will require ceaseless vigilance and a commitment to continually learn and meet the challenges ahead. Time and again, universal policies that have not been specifically directed to stop and repair the harm that continues to afflict African Americans have succeeded only in allowing that harm to continue. Channeling the voices of the hundreds of individuals who testified or offered public comment in Task Force meetings or who participated in community listening sessions, the Task Force urges the Legislature to ensure an end to the ongoing harms and atrocities experienced by its African Americans. This time must be different.

In Part V of the report, the Task Force recommends that the Legislature adopt the following policy proposals:

Chapter 18: Introduction to the Task Force’s Policy Recommendations
a. Introduction
b. General Structural Policy Recommendations
   1. Create and Fund the California American Freedman Affairs Agency
   2. Repeal Proposition 209
   3. Mandate Effective Racial Impact Analyses
   4. Require Agency Transparency
   5. Make Legislative Findings that Build Legislative Records that Reflect the Historic and Present State of Pervasive Structural Barriers and Discrimination Against African Americans and Support Reparative Enactments
   6. Transmit the AB 3121 Task Force report to the President of the United States and the United States Congress

Chapter 19: Policies Addressing Enslavement
1. Enact a Resolution Affirming the State’s Protection of Descendants of Enslaved People and Guaranteeing Protection of the Civil, Political, and Socio-Cultural Rights of Descendants of Enslaved People
2. Amend the California Constitution to Prohibit Involuntary Servitude
3. Require Payment of Fair Market Value for Labor Provided by Incarcerated Persons (Whether in Jail or Prison)
4. Emphasize the “Rehabilitation” in the California Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation (CDCR)
5. Abolish the Death Penalty
6. Prohibit Private Prisons from Benefiting from Contracts with CDCR to Provide Reentry Services to Incarcerated or Paroled Individuals

Chapter 20: Policies Addressing Racial Terror
1. Advance the Study of the Intergenerational, Direct, and Indirect Impacts of Racism
2. Establish and Fund Community Wellness Centers in African American Communities
3. Fund Research to Study the Mental Health Issues Within California’s African American Youth Population, and Address Rising Suicide Rates Among African American Youth
4. Expand the Membership of the Mental Health Services Oversight and Accountability Commission to Include an Expert in Reducing Disparities in Mental Health Care Access and Treatment
5. Fund Community-Driven Solutions to Decrease Community Violence at the Family, School, and Neighborhood Levels in African American Communities
6. Address and Remedy Discrimination Against African American LGBTQ+ Youth and Adults, Reduce Economic Disparities for the African American LGBTQ+ Population, and Reduce Disparities in Mental Health and Health Care Outcomes for African American LGBTQ+ Youth and Adults
7. Implement Procedures to Address the Over-Diagnosis of Emotional Disturbance Disorders, Including Conduct Disorder, in African American Children
8. Disrupt the Mental Health Crisis and County Jail Cycle in African American Communities
9. Create and Fund Equivalents to the UC-PRIME-LEAD-ABC Program for Psychologists, Licensed Professional Counselors, and Licensed Professional Therapists
10. Eliminate Legal Protections for Peace Officers Who Violate Civil or Constitutional Rights
11. Recommend Abolition of the Qualified Immunity Doctrine to Allow Access to Justice for Victims of Police Violence

Chapter 21: Policies Addressing Political Disenfranchisement
1. Require District-Based Voting and Independent Redistricting Commissions to Safeguard Against the Dilution of the African American Voting Bloc
2. Increase Funding to Support the California Department of Justice’s Enforcement of Voting Rights in California
3. Enact Legislation Aligning with the Objectives of AB 2576 and Establish Separate Funding to Support Educational and Civic Engagement Activities
4. Provide Funding to NGOs Whose Work Focuses on Increasing Civic Engagement Among African Americans
5. Declare Election Day a Paid State Holiday and Provide Support to Essential Workers to Increase Access to the Polls
6. Remove the Barrier of Proving Identity to Vote
7. Increase Jury Participation of Persons with Felony Convictions and Discourage Judges and Attorneys from Excluding Potential Jurors Solely for Having a Prior Felony Conviction
8. Increase Efforts to Restore the Voting Rights of Formerly and Currently Incarcerated Persons and Provide Access to Those Who Are Currently Incarcerated and Eligible to Vote

Chapter 22: Policies Addressing Housing Segregation and Unjust Property Takings
1. Prioritize Responsible Development in Communities and Housing Development
2. Enact Policies Overhauling the Housing Industrial Complex
3. Collect Data on Housing Discrimination
4. Provide Anti-Racism Training to Workers in the Housing Field
5. Expand Grant Funding to Community-Based Organizations to Increase Home Ownership
6. Provide Property Tax Relief to African Americans, Especially Descendants, Living in Formerly Redlined Neighborhoods, Who Purchase or Construct a New Home
8. Require State Review and Approval of All Residential Land Use Ordinances Enacted by Historically and Currently Segregated Cities and Counties
9. Repeal Crime-Free Housing Policies
10. Increase Affordable Housing for African American Californians
11. Provide Restitution for Racially Motivated Takings
12. Provide a Right to Return for Displaced African American Californians

Chapter 23: Policies Addressing Separate and Unequal Education
1. Increase Funding to Schools to Address Racial Disparities
2. Fund Grants to Local Educational Agencies to Address the COVID-19 Pandemic’s Impacts on Preexisting Racial Disparities in Education
3. Implement Systematic Review of School Discipline Data
4. Improve Access to Educational Opportunities for All Incarcerated People
5. Adopt Mandatory Curriculum for Teacher Credentialing and Trainings for School Personnel and Grants for Teachers
6. Employ Proven Strategies to Recruit African American Teachers
7. Require that Curriculum at All Levels Be Inclusive and Free of Bias
8. Advance the Timeline for Ethnic Studies Classes
9. Adopt a K-12 Black Studies Curriculum
10. Adopt the Freedom School Summer Program
11. Reduce Racial Disparities in the STEM Fields for African American Students
12. Expand Access to Career Technical Education for Descendants
13. Improve Access to Public Schools
14. Fund Free Tuition to California Public Colleges and Universities
15. Eliminate Standardized Testing for Admission to Graduate Programs in the University of California and California State University Systems
16. Identify and Eliminate Racial Bias and Discrimination in Statewide K-12 Proficiency Assessments

Chapter 24: Policies Addressing Racism in Environment and Infrastructure
1. Increase Greenspace Access and Recreation Opportunities in African American Communities
2. Test for and Eliminate Toxicity in Descendant Communities
3. Increase Trees in Redlined and Descendant Communities
Executive Summary

4. Develop Climate Resilience Hubs in Redlined and Descendant Communities
5. Remove Lead in Drinking Water
6. Prevent Highway Expansion and Mitigate Transportation Pollution

Chapter 25: Policies Addressing Pathologizing the African American Family
1. Reduce and Seek to Eliminate Racial Disparities in the Removal of African American Children from Their Homes and Families
2. Reduce the Placement of African American Children in Foster Care and Increase Kinship Placements for African American Children
3. Establish and Fund Early Intervention Programs that Address Intimate Partner Violence (IPV) Within the African American Community
4. Eliminate Interest on Past-Due Child Support and Eliminate Back Child Support Debt
5. Eliminate or Reduce Charges for Phone Calls from Detention Facilities Located Within the State of California
6. Address Disproportionate Homelessness Among African American Californians
7. Address Disparities and Discrimination Associated with Substance Use Recovery Services
8. End the Under-Protection of African American Women and Girls

Chapter 26: Policies Addressing Control Over Creative, Cultural, & Intellectual Life
9. Provide State Funding to Address Disparities in Compensation Among Athletes in the University of California, California State University, and Community College Systems and Funding to Support African American Athletes in Capitalizing on their Name, Image, and Likeness and Intellectual Property

11. Identify and Remove Monuments, Plaques, State Markers, and Memorials Memorializing and Preserving Confederate Culture; Erect Monuments, Plaques, and Memorials Memorializing and Preserving the Reconstruction Era and the African American Community
12. Provide Funding to the Proposed California American Freedman Affairs Agency, Specifically for Creative, Cultural, and Intellectual Life
13. Eliminate the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation's Practice of Banning Books

Chapter 27: Policies Addressing Stolen Labor and Hindered Opportunity
1. Create Greater Transparency in Gubernatorial Appointments
2. Provide Guaranteed Income Program for Descendants
3. Eliminate Barriers to Licensure for People with Criminal Records
4. Transform the Minimum Wage Back into a Living Wage
5. Advance Pay Equity Through Employment Transparency and Equity in Hiring and Promotion
6. Create and Fund Professional Career Training
7. Create or Fund Apprenticeship Grant Programs
8. Fund African American Businesses
9. Fund African American Banks

Chapter 28: Policies Addressing the Unjust Legal System
1. Allocate Funds to Remedy Harms and Promote Opportunity
2. Eliminate Barriers for African American Prospective Attorneys by Funding Legal Education and Ending Discriminatory Gatekeeping at the State Bar
3. Prohibit Cash Bail and Mandate that Those Who Are Acquitted or Exonerated be Reimbursed by the Entity or Entities at Fault
4. Enact Enforceable Legislation with Penalties that Dismantles the School to Prison Pipeline and Decriminalizes the Youth Justice System
5. Amend the Penal Code to Clarify and Confirm Decriminalization of Transit and Other Public Disorder Offenses
6. Amend the Penal Code to Shift Public Disorder Infractions and Low-Level Crimes Outside of Law Enforcement Jurisdiction
7. Prohibit pretextual Traffic and Pedestrian Stops, Probation Inquiries, and Consent-Only Searches
8. Mandate Policies and Training on Bias-Free Policing
9. Enact Legislation that Requires the Department of Justice to Promulgate Model Law Enforcement Policies Designed to Prevent Racial Disparities in Policing
10. Repeal Three Strikes Sentencing
11. Strengthen and Expand the Racial Justice Act
12. Assess and Remedy Racially Biased Treatment of African American Adults and Juveniles in Custody in County Jails, State Prisons, Juvenile Halls, and Youth Camps
13. Accelerate Scheduled Closures of Identified California State Prisons and Close Ten Prisons Over the Next Five Years, with Financial Savings Redirected to the California American Freedman Affairs Agency
PART VI: MEASURING THE BASELINE FOR RACIAL JUSTICE ACT IMPLEMENTATION

XXXI. California Prosecutorial and Judicial Race Data Survey: Summary of Responses

AB 2542, the California Racial Justice Act of 2020 (Act or RJA), codified in Section 745 of the California Penal Code, prohibits California, through any criminal prosecutor acting in the name of the People or the State, from seeking or obtaining a criminal conviction, or from imposing a sentence, based upon race, ethnicity, or national origin. The Act allows an accused person to seek dismissal of pending charges, or vacatur of a conviction or sentence, through a claim alleging that a charge, conviction, or sentence was tainted by racial bias. The Act originally applied prospectively to cases in which judgment had not been entered prior to January 1, 2021. However, AB 256, the Racial Justice Act for All, enacted in 2022, extended the Act’s protections to apply retroactively to most cases in which judgment was entered before January 1, 2021.

The Racial Justice Act offers different pathways to demonstrating a violation. Some involve showing overt bias or animus, such as use of discriminatory language by a courtroom actor. Others allow for claims that arise from implicit bias. A central purpose of the Act was to respond to McCleskey v. Kemp (1987) charging with or convicted of a more serious offense than similarly situated persons of other races, ethnicities, or national origins who commit similar offenses, and the evidence establishes that the prosecution more frequently sought or obtained convictions for more serious

The Act allows an accused person to seek dismissal of pending charges, or vacatur of a conviction or sentence, through a claim alleging that a charge, conviction, or sentence was tainted by racial bias.
Chapter 32
The Task Force engaged the Ralph J. Bunche Center at the University of California, Los Angeles, to design and implement a plan in which it could facilitate the collection and documenting of important community perspectives independent of the formal meetings of the Task Force, through: (1) holding community listening sessions, and engaging with at least 867 people during 2022; (2) collecting seven oral histories and 46 personal testimonies; and (3) administering two statewide surveys. The first survey comprised a representative sample of all Californians, with 2,499 respondents. The second sample, with 1,934 respondents, was over 90 percent African American, and reached through connections to listening session participants. The fundamental goal of this work was to give the community voice in the ongoing statewide conversation concerning reparations—to create space for communities to express their concerns, desires, wishes, and experiences—and to provide the Task Force and the Legislature with additional community input as it explored and deliberated reparations proposals.

Through this multi-pronged approach to community engagement, the Bunche Center focused its data collection and transmission requirements were set forth in AB 2418, there appears to be a large amount of discretion, and likewise variability, in what data elements are collected across California district attorney's offices, superior courts, and select city attorney's offices and between counties. This lack of consistency and absence of data on key variables could present substantial challenges to presenting and evaluating claims of racial discrimination in the criminal justice system, and could increase the difficulty of sustaining claims of Racial Justice Act violations in some California counties more than others.

PART VII: LISTENING TO THE COMMUNITY

Racial Justice Act violations can occur at a number of different decision points, including the decision regarding which charges to bring, the convictions obtained, and in sentencing. Where claims of violations involve comparisons to the treatment of others, information about an accused individual’s race, the race of the complainant or victim, and the race of those in comparable cases can be critical to establishing a prima facie case that a violation has occurred. A lack of data on race in comparable cases can severely limit the ability of an accused or convicted person to support claims of racial bias. The same is true when agencies do not track or share data on key decisions made by the prosecutor, judge, or jury in comparable cases. This lack of critical information impedes implementation and diminishes the efficacy of the Racial Justice Act. Without access to data, the promise of the Act has the potential to ring hollow for many. Gauging the availability of RJA-relevant data is thus critical to understanding the landscape for potential claims that may be raised under the Act.

In order to establish a baseline regarding the collection of RJA-relevant data, the AB 3121 Reparations Task Force requested that the California Department of Justice Research Center (DOJRC) survey all 58 California superior courts and district attorney offices, as well as a select group of 11 of the largest city attorney offices, regarding what data elements their agencies regularly collect when dealing with criminal cases. The 126 responding criminal justice agencies and courts completed an online questionnaire pertaining to data collected and maintained by their agency, with a focus on what racial data the agencies hold as well as data on factors that may involve prosecutorial or judicial discretion. Chapter 31 of the Task Force’s report describes and summarizes the findings.

Notably, the DOJRC conducted the survey prior to the retroactive application of the Act and prior to implementation of AB 2418 (2021–22), the Justice Data Accountability and Transparency Act. The latter statute sought to mandate that agencies collect and transmit specified data, including data on the race of accused persons and victims, to the Department of Justice. These data collection and transmission requirements were set to commence in 2027. However, AB 2418 conditioned the operation of its provisions upon an adequate appropriation by the Legislature. As of the time of this Report’s issuance, there has not been an appropriation to this effect. As set forth in Part V, the Task Force’s recommendations to the Legislature include full funding of AB 2418 and any further data collection, extraction, analysis, and dissemination that is needed for the Racial Justice Act to be implemented and applied without limitation. An unfunded or otherwise unfulfilled mandate will gravely undermine the law and risk the persistence of unacceptable racial bias in the criminal legal system.

Overall, in the absence of requirements like those set forth in AB 2418, there appears to be a large amount of discretion, and likewise variability, in what data elements are collected across California district attorney’s offices, superior courts, and select city attorney’s offices and between counties. This lack of consistency and absence of data on key variables could present substantial challenges to presenting and evaluating claims of racial discrimination in the criminal justice system, and could increase the difficulty of sustaining claims of Racial Justice Act violations in some California counties more than others.
collection on four areas deemed important by the Task Force: (1) identifying forms of race-based harm through those who experienced it; (2) gauging support for reparations; (3) determining support for different types of reparations; and (4) determining perspective from the wider impacted community regarding eligibility for reparations.

An analysis of the results of the community listening sessions, personal testimonies, oral histories, and statewide surveys revealed the following:

- There are five major types of racially-driven harm that communities consistently identified. Study participants named lack of educational opportunity, discriminatory policing and law enforcement, economic disenfranchisement, housing inequality, and healthcare disparities most often when asked about racially-driven harms that Black people experience. The participants also consistently cited the following harms: food inaccessibility, employment and workplace disparities, inadequate business support infrastructure, the cycle of municipal disinvestment in Black neighborhoods, and displacement.

- While a majority of Californians support reparations measures, they are divided on which types should be used. The survey queried respondents on the specific forms of reparations to be applied and found that California residents are largely in support of the three primary types of reparations measures—direct cash payments (66 percent of respondents); monetary reparations without cash measures (77 percent); and non-monetary reparations, such as an apology or monuments (73 percent). Support was consistently highest for remedies incorporating monetary measures, but without direct cash payments, among all Californians, including African American participants. The community listening sessions produced similar results, except that direct cash payments were the most frequently mentioned form of reparations, followed by other monetary measures.

- The opinions about who should be eligible for reparations differed across the statewide sample, the community listening session sample, and African American residents in the statewide sample. A plurality of respondents in the statewide sample supported reparations for all Black people (30 percent) followed closely by support for lineage-based reparations (29 percent). Lineage-based reparations refers to people who are descendants of those enslaved in the U.S. In the statewide sample, 24 percent believed that reparations should be for those Black people who experienced race-based discrimination. On the other hand, 67 percent of respondents in the community listening session sample supported reparations for people who descended from those enslaved in the U.S. (lineage based), while 18 percent supported reparations for all Black people. Black Californians were in the middle of responses when compared to both the overall statewide and community listening session samples. Black Californians indicate nearly equal support for lineage-based (40 percent) reparations and for reparations for all Black residents (39 percent).

The Task Force urges the Legislature, in formulating a state reparations statute or program, to ensure that the widest possible community engagement takes place, in order to ensure that what is enacted in carrying out the recommendations of this report reflects the input of the community intended to be served by this initiative.
PART VIII: RECOMMENDATIONS FOR EDUCATING THE PUBLIC

Chapter 33: Educating the Public & Responses to Questions
In enacting AB 3121, the Legislature directed the Task Force to recommend appropriate ways to educate the California public regarding the Task Force’s findings. To achieve this goal, the Task Force consulted academic experts to develop a concept for educating students of all ages and backgrounds, as well as the public in general, through a curriculum designed to make the Task Force’s work accessible.

The Task Force recommends that the Legislature adopt the concepts discussed in Chapter 33 of this report, which the Task Force developed with the support of these experts, as a methodology for adopting a standard curriculum centered on the Task Force’s findings and recommendations. The Task Force further recommends that the Legislature fund the implementation of age-appropriate curricula across all grade levels, as well as the delivery of these curricula in schools across California. The Legislature should also create a public education fund, specifically dedicated to educating the public about African American history, and support the initial and ongoing education about the Task Force’s findings. Additionally, in order to facilitate ongoing conversations in communities across California following the publication of this report, the Task Force has developed materials included within Chapter 33 that will help answer some potential questions people may have about reparations. These questions are expected to come from both those who support reparations, but want to better understand their justification, and those who might be unaware of the need for or purpose of reparations.

PART IX: KEY CASES AND STATUTES

Through its enactment of AB 3121, the Legislature charged the Task Force with compiling “[t]he federal and state laws that discriminated against formerly enslaved Africans and their descendants . . . from 1868 to the present,” and identifying “[h]ow California laws and policies that continue to disproportionately and negatively affect African Americans as a group and perpetuate the lingering material and psychosocial effects of slavery can be eliminated.” Part IX of the report contains a legal compendium that catalogues, summarizes, and memorializes for the public the many state and federal laws that have perpetuated discrimination against African Americans in California, as well as some cases and laws that advanced the rights of African Americans by setting aside those racist laws and policies. Due to the myriad ways in which laws and cases have created and nurtured this system of subjugation, the compendium is illustrative, not exhaustive. Nevertheless, it is intended to provide a comprehensive documentation of the centuries-long struggle in California, dating back to the earliest years of statehood, for personhood, equality, and equity.

Part IX is divided thematically, based on five major subject areas discussed throughout the Task Force’s report: (1) Housing (Chapter 35); (2) Labor (Chapter 36); (3) Education (Chapter 37); (4) Political Participation (Chapter 38); (5) the Unjust Legal System (Chapter 39); and (6) Civil Rights Cases (Chapter 40). In doing so, the compendium documents many of the constitutional provisions, statutes, and court cases that form the foundations of the discrimination and atrocities discussed throughout Chapters 1-13 of this report.

812 U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, CPI Inflation Calculator (as of Apr. 24, 2023) (inputting the dates of January 1930 and January 1980 and rounding to the nearest dollar). If kept in nominal dollars, not adjusted for inflation, the difference between the 1980 mean, per capita homeownership gap between African Americans and white Americans ($1,573 in 1980 dollars) and the 1930 mean, per capita homeownership gap between African Americans and white Americans ($326 in 1930 dollars) is $1,247. Compounding $1,247 up to 2020 using the annual 30-year mortgage interest rate yields a per-capita white–African American homeownership gap of $180,027—or $4,092 for each year between 1933 and 1977 spent as a resident of the State of California.
